Maui's neighbors speak up about dog's behavior

By Steve Adams
Mariner staff

Residents in the Pleasant Street neighborhood support selectmen's recent decision to ban Matthew Fitzpatrick's dog Maui from town.

Feb. 28, the board told Fitzpatrick the Rottweiler/boxer mixed breed female would be banished from town if it received any more complaints of the dog running loose.

June 6, in response to a complaint of an incident May 29, the board voted to ban the dog. Fitzpatrick is appealing the decision in Quincy District Court.

Neighbors say the decision reflects a long history of aggressive behavior by the dog.

Shortly after Labor Day last year, the Corry family of 81 Pleasant St. said Maui first showed aggression without provocation. The dog growled and lunged at Martin Corry in his yard.

"He didn't know what to do," said his wife, Jane Corry. "He tried to calmly talk to her, saying, 'Nice doggy.' That's the first time we knew we had a problem."

Talking to their neighbors, they found out they weren't the only ones having problems with Maui. Margaret Stoughton and Lisa Costa, both of Pleasant Street, also reported similar incidents.

"This we all found out about after the fact," said Jane Corry. "When people heard about it, they started to come forward."

When a chain-link enclosed pen was finally erected in the Fitzpatrick's back yard last spring, the Corry's thought the problem had been solved. Then came the incident May 29 when Maui either fell or leapt out of Fitzpatrick's truck and approached 12-year-old Megan Corry.

"I was walking toward the driveway," recalled Megan. "The dog started barking very fiercely. You sort of know when a dog is barking friendly and when it's not. And that dog did not 'fall.'"

As Maui leapt from the bed of the pick-up, she skidded a few feet along the pavement, Megan Corry said.

"If it hadn't slipped, it would have got me," she said. "I was screaming. I was crying. It was going to lunge at me."

Said Jane Corry: "When she started screaming, I pulled her inside, and the dog was right behind her."

"I didn't do anything to provoke her," said Megan. "I was just walking, minding my own business.

"If I do have to go to court to testify, I will. Because I don't want what happened to me to happen to some other little kid," she added.

"That was the clincher for us," said Jane Corry of the May 29 incident. "When that happened, I couldn't believe it. I thought, 'There's no end to this at all.'"

Martin Corry, who works as an attorney in Boston, said he saw an opportunity to "pro-actively deal with a situation that normally doesn't get dealt with until after there's a bite. Most people won't take the time. There are a lot of children in this neighborhood and this dog is aggressive."

On the basis of that incident, selectmen voted June 6 to order Fitzpatrick to remove Maui from town. In March, the board ordered Maui leashed or restrained at all times. At that time, selectmen also cited a legal opinion from Town Counsel Richard A. Henderson that they could banish the dog from Cohasset without a further hearing if they received a report that it had gotten loose.

In February, Margaret Stoughton testified to selectmen that Maui entered her yard on April 14, 1993, grabbed her hand and nearly bit her.

According to neighbors, Maui's adventures over the past two years haven't been limited to Pleasant Street. Last fall, she accosted a group of children playing in a yard on an adjoining street.

The children's mother, who was not notified in advance of the March hearing, wrote to the selectmen afterward describing the incident. The letter was not taken as evidence because the hearing had already taken place.

"When I read about the hearing, I wrote a letter to the selectmen to let them know this was not an isolated incident," she said. "She was circling around them, barking, and then she was lunging at them. They were holding an oar out in front to keep her away. She was pushing at the oar."

May 29, the same day Maui escaped from Fitzpatrick's truck, she was running loose on James Street and accosted her husband and son while they were delivering newspapers, the resident said.

"I think it's a difficult decision to make," she said of the selectmen's decision. "I think they had to make the decision. The owner knew. Are you going to follow up on the decision of your hearing or not?"

"Not to feel safe on your own property — that's the reason we live in Cohasset," said Jane Corry. "We've lived here 16 years, and all our neighbors are wonderful." Many residents on the street own dogs but none have exhibited threatening behavior except Maui, she said.

Benefit for children

Rudolph Adamo Salons is sponsoring an evening of fashion at 7 p.m. Thursday June 23 at the Scituate Country Club as a fund-raiser for the families of children receiving treatment at the New England Medical Center's Floating Hospital for children with cancer.

The fashion show will feature the summer and fall collections from Crossing Main in Hingham, Char Classics in Hanover, The Children's Place of Kingston and The Baby to Bride Boutique in Weymouth.

There will be raffles and a silent auction and a dessert buffet and cash bar will be available throughout the evening courtesy of the Barker Tavern.

Tickets are available at Rudolph Adamo Salon, 7 Stagecoach Rd., Cohasset; from Susan Stella at Barker Tavern, 21 Barker Rd., Scituate; or by calling Marita Carpenter at 383-2914.

Carillon recital June 26

Linda Walker Pointer, carillonneur from Clearwater, Florida, will perform a free recital on the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, Sunday, June 26, at 6 p.m. This is the first of ten weekly performances throughout the summer by various artists in a carillon series that is in its seventieth year.

Dr. Pointer studied at the Royal Carillon School of Mechelen, Belgium, where she received her Final Diploma with honors. Since then she has played recitals in Belgium, Holland, Denmark and England, as well as at many carillons in the United States.

Listeners are encouraged to bring lawn chairs, blankets, and picnic suppers to the Cohasset Common, where the music of the bells can best be enjoyed. Driving from the north or west, take Route 3 to Route 228 and follow signs to Cohasset. For further information, call Saint Stephen's Church at 383-1083.

Sundays, 6 p.m., on the Cohasset Common
June 26 — Linda Walker Pointer, Clearwater, Florida
July 3 — Daniel K. Kehoe, Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut

The Hearing Center
Have You Heard?

by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist

THE NOISE FROM WITHIN

While most of us hear ringing in our ears (tinnitus) only occasionally, some 36 million people in this country experience it as a chronic condition. According to the American Tinnitus Association, ringing in the ears is the most common noise heard by tinnitus sufferers. Other sounds associated with tinnitus include hissing, humming, sizzling, whistling, cricket sounds, and the roar of the ocean. Not surprisingly, 54 percent of tinnitus-sufferers say it can sometimes make them irritable. Sixty percent said that ringing in their ears disrupted sleep, and some seven million people have tinnitus so severe that it interferes with normal living. For some, relief may be available by using a masker, a hearing instrument which produces "white noise" on the same frequency as the tinnitus.

If you are concerned about a hearing problem, please come visit us at THE HEARING CENTER There are many situations in which a hearing aid can help you. We offer state of the art equipment including computerized hearing aids. Our number one priority is commitment to your needs. For more information about the options available to you, Please come visit us at 306 Washington St. (Rte. 53), Norwell, and 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3A), Quincy. Our phone number for both locations 1-800-339-9316. Mastercard and Visa are accepted. We accept all insurance plans and will help you process the forms.

P.S. Those who have a hearing loss along with tinnitus may find that a hearing instrument alone will mask tinnitus. Others find a hearing instrument with a masker to be best.

Students of the Month
Jen Vanderpool and Melissa van der Werf

I hereby nominate two students for Students of the Month. Although each of these students is unique in her own right and deserves consideration by herself, they have so much in common that nominating one and ignoring the other would be unfair. Both have had to deal with the difficult task of moving to a new part of the country and adjusting to a new and very different school system at what could have been perplexing times in their high school careers — in one case the summer before her junior year and in the other the even more difficult time of the summer before her senior year. Neither allowed herself to indulge in self-pity; instead, both threw themselves into active involvement in their new school. Both have been involved in senior class activities from Powderpuff Football in the fall to Senior Show in the spring. Cohasset High School has been made a better place by the presence of Melissa van der Werf and Jen Vanderpool (our "new kids" from Arizona and New York respectively).

Known primarily as a cheerleader, Melissa van der Werf has stretched in a number of other positive directions and has had a strong impact on CHS in the year and a half she has been here. We all know her as a cheerleader co-captain and are aware of her journey to London as a result of her work in that activity, but this year she has also moved into new areas while maintaining a place on the academic honor roll. She has, for example, had a front-page article in the school newspaper. Realizing that I needed someone with enough knowledge of aerobics to design the movement for one part of "Dancing with Strangers", I turned to Melissa. Her work was so good that she not only joined the cast of that show as an actress but also impressed me enough to warrant casting her in "What You Will" as well. Her work in "Dancing with Strangers" won her an award as one of the outstanding performers at the Emerson College Drama Festival.

Transferring to a new school is tough enough at any time, but making a move at the start of your senior year is exceedingly difficult. Despite this fact, Jen Vanderpool has come to CHS in her senior year and succeeded in many areas. A member of chorus and a new cheerleader captain, Jen has also appeared in every production of the Drama Workshop this year and played three different roles in the Cohasset entry in the state drama festival. Within one week of her enrollment at CHS, Jen had a lead role in the first play of the year. In addition, her vocal work earned her a place in the SEMSBA chorus. Jen needs only to be asked to try something, and she will give it her all. Her smile and pleasant personality make working with her a joy.

These two women have brought a great deal to Cohasset High School. They both deserve to be the February Students of the Month.

Mr. Emmons

Twenty junior high students recently competed in the preliminary round of the Scripps Howard National Spelling Bee. The following students, who were classroom champions, participated:

Grade 8 Classroom Champions: Stephen Baker, Christopher Laas, Allison Kinchla, Raishaun Barboza, Renese Wright, Patrick Hurley, Greg Bilton, Courtney Brown, Andrew Hamilton, Garrick Towle, and Bourke Corcoran.

Grade 7: Mark Caristi, Morgan Bigley, Kaitlin Jackson, Katie Walsh, Sergei Skorupa, Greg Connolly, John-Paul Laugelle, Ben Littauer, and James O'Sullivan.

The school champion was James O'Sullivan, a seventh grader, who will represent Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School at the regional contest May 26. The regional winner then represents the school at the National Spelling Bee held in Washington, D.C. Ben Littauer, also a grade seven student, was school runner-up and alternate. Andrew Hamilton won first place in grade eight, and Chris Laas placed second. Each contestant was presented with a certificate of achievement and a silver dollar. The P.S.O. sponsors this preliminary event.

Diversity Awareness makes a difference

By Diane Kinch and Susan Etkind
Special to the Mariner

Over the course of this year a committee has evolved to address issues dealing with diversity awareness and respect. This committee started to take shape as a result of a diversity workshop organized by the Cohasset PSO and run by Miriam Jefferson, the director of the Boston chapter of the National Building Committee Institute. This worldwide organization problem-solves and troubleshoots within businesses, schools and communities. Their adeptness and professional expertise were sought to convey an understanding of diversity, after prejudicial remarks and comments had been made from children to other children within our school system.

As parents, teachers, clergy etc., we are not always equipped with the best responses to our children when they are hurt by a remark or if they make a prejudiced comment themselves. Since we do not have all the answers, but are willing to form some questions, the diversity committee is seeking ways to prepare our children for the larger world.

The committee's first venture and achievement was sponsoring "Schindler's List" so that all 10th, 11th and 12th graders at Cohasset High could attend this important film, free of charge. It was seen in the context of class study and discussion. Principal Meg Gallagher and Dorothy Wondalowski, head of the Social Studies Department, helped organize and prepare students.

The following are excerpts taken from students' essays after they saw the film. We wish we could have included all their comments.

"...The movie was a complete and total eye opener. Before I would hear about the Holocaust and I wouldn't think twice about it, because it really had no effect on me. But after watching the movie, I almost felt as though I were personally there. It was scary to think humans could behave no better than animals. It broke my heart to know and see that children went through that ordeal..."

"...For years I have been presented with a history text that vaguely outlined the Jewish concentration camps, genocide and abuse. Yet, you never really got a full understanding or feeling of the destruction and terror from two pages of a textbook. 'Schindler's List' made me realize the Jewish persecution was real. Quite often society tends to claim that it never happened..."

"...I learned how crucial the fight against discrimination actually is. Too many generations were lost, whole families gone, who would have contributed much to society..."

"...It made me think that if every person just did a little, whatever they could, then maybe things would have been better and so many people wouldn't have lost their lives."

"...I was glad everyone could go at once (to the movie) providing substantial room for discussion..."

"...It was amazing how the German officers would kill the Jews at random, with little or no reason..."

"...My parents wouldn't have taken me to this movie. I'm glad the school did."

"...For me the movie served as an introduction to the Jewish culture via the background information presented at the beginning of the film."

"...I feel many kids went (to the movie) to get out of class, but the silence, after the movie, proved me wrong. Everyone felt a little more aware and a little more responsible to fight against hatred..."

"...The movie affects me in a sense that Blacks were put in a similar situation. The shooting and working conditions were the same as the slaves..."

"...I was glad that people such as Schindler helped the Jewish people. I know some other people did what they could by hiding families. It gives me some hope for the human race..."

"...The movie gave me the idea of self importance and knowledge, that if even the minority speak up, we can prevent another world war..."

"...I fear raising my children in a world that can be so full of hate and violence. It is no place for children..."

"...I think after watching this movie, I will be more tolerant and ethnically aware and accepting..."

"...I am glad we saw this movie, because people and events must be remembered and the survivors and the people of the world are the ones responsible for this rememberance..."

The Cohasset High School should be commended for taking a stand in bringing students to this movie. The many community members who financially supported this venture are also appreciated, and a special thanks goes to The Patriot Cinemas at Harborlight Mall for their generosity in providing a special viewing time and rate for our students. The Cohasset High School students should also be recognized for their respectful demeanor during this field trip project and for their insightful comments, sensitivity for the issue, awareness of the problems and hopes to make a difference in their world.

The Diversity Committee is discussing a wide range of ideas to work on this year, such as assessing pre-school curriculum to include more concepts of tolerance and respect, a junior social awareness club based on the example of the one started by students at the high school; working with PSO curriculum enrichment committee; diversity training for community members, churches, parents, teachers, and students; and interfacing with the Metco Program. We are forming subcommittees to work on small projects and needs assessment. Our members include parents, school staff, community members — all are welcome. Call Susan Etkind at 383-6602.

Jamboree fails to diminsh JV laxmen's season

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Cohasset High's scrappy JV lacrosse team may not have saved its best play of the season for last, but last weekend's second annual Mass Bay Youth Jamboree at Lincoln-Sudbury High School easily ranked as the most bizarre day of the spring for the 12-2 Skippers.

Not only did the temperature hover in the mid-90s with high humidity, but head coach Terry Kahn had to contend with top-two teams in the North section of the Elite Division by drawing Derry, New Hampshire and Weston/Wayland.

The day looked to be a long one when Cohasset dropped its contest to Derry, 6-2. Add the fact that the Skippers were lacking their usual offensive punch with the absence of top-scoring Taylor Devin (50 points), one of the team's four MVPs, along with Ely Kahn, Taylor Devin John Kasameyer and Morgan Sandell, and the day felt hotter, the competition tougher and the frustration higher.

Mercifully, Cohasset didn't have to play its third game, a meaningless affair against Norwell High. The Skippers had already easily beaten the Clippers twice during the regular season and a third contest would prove nothing.

There was no Norwell, but Weston/Wayland proved to be more than a formidable foe as the squad, taking after Observations on the most fascinating and explosive sports story of the year. (And no I'm not talking about the Rangers winning the Stanley Cup. I'm talking about the "Juice.")

•When they make the O.J. Simpson movie, I think Eddie Murphy should star as the "Juice." (Eddie really needs a hit for his career and he knows the streets of Beverly Hills for the Bronco chase scenes.)

Nicole Brown Simpson, his murdered wife, should be played by Nicole Eggert of "Baywatch." (They both have the same first name and they both are blonde. A nice Hollywood coincidence.)

The head LA cop should of course be Tommy Lee Jones, hot from "The Fugitive." (Only this time, Tommy will play a real dumb police guy to match the job of the California blue boys.)

Ronald Lyle Goldman, Nicole's "friend" should be played by Johnny Depp. (This one's a tough call but I like the sound of Johnny Depp's name.)

And O.J.'s friend and driver Al Cowling should be played by Martin Lawrence. (Martin's a funny guy and he and Eddie hang around a lot so there will be some screen chemistry.)

Tentative titles for the flick: "Squeezing the Juice," "Don't Mess with O.J.'s Woman," or my favorite, "Ride on the Heisman Highway."

•Imagine if someone dialed the wrong car phone number on Friday night and got through to the "Juice" and his buddy with all those cops on their tails.

"Hello, can I speak to Roger please?"

"There ain't no one named Roger here."

"Is this 555-3497?"

"No it isn't."

"It has to be. I never dial wrong. Are you sure Roger isn't there with you."

"Look, I have a lot on my mind. I just killed my wife and her boyfriend, I have a gun to my head and there are 25 cops and four helicopters chasing me. Trust me there ain't nobody named Roger here."

"Is this O.J.?"

"Say what?"

"Oh my God, Did you know you're on TV right now. I'm one of your biggest fans."

"Why thank you."

"Do you remember when you reached 2,000 yards against the Jets. I was there."

"That's great. Look, I gotta go. I have to go home and get some orange juice and go the bathroom before I shoot myself in the head."

"O.J., was Mean Joe Greene the toughest player you ever faced or was it Ted Hendricks?"

"Leave me alone or I'm going to shoot myself."

"I'm guessing it was Mean Joe Greene because he always came up with the big plays against you guys."

"Listen I'm hanging up."

"O.J. one more quick question before you shoot. If you had no other options, would you rent a car from Avis?"

Click.

"Juice? Are you still there?"

Hettstrom qualifies for B.S.G. on beam

Erica Hettstrom will be advancing to the finals and competing on the Balance Beam in the Bay State Games.

Hettstrom, a South Shore League All-Star for Cohasset Junior/Senior High School and member of the South Shore Community Center "Gymnast In Motion" squad, traveled to Paramount Gymnastics in Swansea, Mass. to try out for the Bay State Games.

There were 80 gymnasts competing to make the finals to be held at MIT July 16 and 17. Hettstrom was one of only 20 gymnasts to make the finals. All the gymnasts performed in the All-Around competition in 100 degree conditions.

All-Star gymnast Erica Hettstrom trains on the balance beam, the event she'll be competing in during the Bay State Games.

Cohasset Yacht Club hosts Adams Cup

Aug. 26 to 31, Cohasset Yacht Club will host the 1994 Adams Cup (U.S. Women's National Sailing Championship). This summer will mark the 70th year of the Cup and coincides with Cohasset Yacht Club's 100th anniversary celebration. CYC and the Adams Cup share a long history.

Ten crews of four women will compete in this championship event. Each representing a yacht club, the crews will have won an extensive elimination series in one of 10 districts in the U.S. The Adams Cup will be raced in International 210's, 30-foot keelboats that first appeared on Massachusetts Bay almost 50 years ago (1945) The Cup has been raced in 210's more than any other boat in its 70 years. The Adams Cup is a round robin series, meaning that crews switch boats after every race, and the importance of individual boats becomes secondary to the skill of each crew.

The first women's sailing championship of any kind, named the Hodder Cup, for the Massachusetts Women's Sailing Championship, was first raced in 1924, and it was won by two Cohasset sisters. In 1925 Charles Francis Adams donated a cup in honor of his wife, and it was retired in 1929 after being won by Cohasset Yacht Club three times. A long-standing Cohasset member, Frances McElwain Wakeman, won the new perpetual Adams Cup four consecutive years, from 1935 to 1938, the only woman ever to do so. Mrs. Wakeman has been a trustee of the Adams Cup since 1950, and she attends each year's finals, often serving as a Senior Judge. She has been a major force behind CYC's effort to host the Cup, and, while no longer competing at age 80, is an active on-the-water observer. She has been active this year in fund-raising and shore side activities, and she will host the sailors dinner for the championship crews at her home.

The Cohasset Yacht Club looks much like it did 100 years ago a shingled, one-room clubhouse perched over the harbor. The club boasts an active racing fleet of 210's, as well as a fleet of Flying Scotts and various cruising boats. The junior programs continues to be a major part of the club. "Rookies," which had been the beginners' boats since 1931, were replaced by Optimist dinghies in 1992. A "Chowder Race" caps the end of every summer, where any boat with a sail may participate in an exciting, light-spirited race that starts and finishes off the club dock. There are many events planned to celebrate the CYC's 100th year this summer, and the club is proud to have the Adams Cup coincide with its anniversary.

CHS Skippers sail to victory in states

By Liz Menis
Special to the Mariner

Having placed second in the state championship in '92 and '93, the CHS sailing team hoped '94 would be its year to upset Belmont Hill's seven straight victories. This was indeed the year for Cohasset to break Belmont Hill's streak. However, it was Marblehead High School that won the first-place trophy. For the third straight year, the CHS team brought home the trophy for second place overall and added first- and second-place awards for "Low Point Skippers" in both divisions.

Nineteen public and private high schools participated in the two-day series of races, held on May 26-27 at the MIT Sailing Pavilion on the Charles River. The Skippers' team of Joe Menis and Chloe Chittick, Division A, and Dave Nothnagle and Melissa Weier, Division B, sailed a great series of races in a very competitive fleet, to finish with 62 points, only 21 points behind first-place Marblehead. Belmont Hill captured third with 75 points.

The outstanding performance of the Cohasset sailors was distinguished only by their win of the second-place trophy, but also by the achievement of Menis and Chittick's winning Division A with 25 points, and Nothnagle and Weier's second place in Division B.

The Skippers' outstanding showing in the States capped a cold and breezy spring sailing season. The four State Champions were backed by a team that included senior Sondre Hauland and eighth graders Kyle Whiteley, Colin Pyfrom, and Mike Christoffel. In the Skippers' win against New England champions Falmouth High School, sailed on a cold and windy day on Vineyard Sound, Colin Pyfrom proved a valuable third helmsman. Aided by crew Whitley, Pyfrom showed good boat handling in difficult conditions and exhibited great potential for the future of CHS sailing. Sondre Hauland, an exchange student from Norway, also proved to be a tremendous addition to the team, bringing his many years of sailing experience to good use m meets against Milton Academy and Barnstable High School.

Well-deserved congratulations go to all Skippers sailors!

Theriault's effort salvages tie for Sharks

In the immortal words of Cohasset football coach Ted McDermott, "A tie is like kissin' your sister!" In the most recent Landsharks game, however, a tie was the result of a sweet comeback.

Scott Theriault was nothing short of awesome on this day. He was working overtime in the heat and humidity of the Tuesday night affair, but his work paid dividends. Theriault had five strikeouts on the day and poured it on down the stretch, retiring the last 11 Pembroke batters who had the unfortunate task of facing him. Theriault also had two RBI in the seventh inning while his fellow predators scored one in each of the two previous frames.

While Theriault shined, other Sharks had the glow of a game face on as well. Dave Leahy was a contributor to the victory. After hitting a deep fly ball out to left in his first at bat, he strode to the batters box with confidence. Calmly he yelled a promise to Nick Welz on first base.

"I'll knock you in, kid," he calmly said. The next pitch was spanked to the left-field fence for a double. He stood on second base with a look that stated his feelings. "Good for me!"

Yet another story was that of Joe Menis. He took extra batting practice and it paid off as he got his first base hit ever in organized baseball! This milestone hit was a steaming liner to the hot corner which Menis beat out with a climactic head-first slide into first.

Greg Stevens was awakened from his sickbed to play a strong second base and Neven Bunstien called a great game as Theriault's battery mate. Andy Kamataris was another unsung hero who, as he has all year for the Skippers, anchored the infield.

This game was played with two unfamiliar faces at the helm, Bryan Welz and Chris Kondrat. Welz, a previous fan of the day winner kept his unblemished record alive thanks to the assistance given by the injured Kondrat. The official coach and G.M., Mike and John Rolandelli, along with catcher Chris, are on a well-deserved holiday. The Sharks, however, continue their swim to a league title on Thursday at South Boston.

Take your best shot

By Bobby Orr
Special to the Mariner

Some people say that the final score is all that counts. Winning is everything — and there's no prize for second place. But I don't feel that way. I think there is something more to be gained through sports than a trophy, a winning goal or the admiration of fans. More important things like teamwork, discipline and self-esteem.

As an athlete, I know the important values that sports can teach our children. But often times, the most important lesson to be learned is for the parents and coaches.

Like me, you've probably seen or read about incidents where adults involved with youth sports have lost their perspective: coaches hitting players after a losing game; a disappointed father humiliating his son about an error on third base; or a parent cursing at a referee for a bad call. Are these good examples of sportsmanship? I don't think so. Is that what we want to teach our youth about sports? Absolutely not.

In the course of my travels, I've become deeply concerned about the future of youth sports, and the pressure that is being placed on youngsters while playing games. If allowed to continue, the problems I've seen developing will not only have a damaging effect on sports, but most importantly, it will damage our youth.

I believe that the real value of playing sports is for youngsters to have fun, and to learn lessons that will help them in the future with whatever career they may choose. For if children are having fun, there is so much they can learn while playing sports.

Through sports, youths can learn the importance of working hard and dedicating themselves to a goal. They can learn the value of discipline, responsibility, and teamwork. They can learn to listen. And they can learn the meaning of respect — not only for their teammates, but for their coaches, officials, teachers, and competitors. It's an important lesson to be learned, because in life, just as in sports, there will always be somebody better out there — someone more knowledgeable.

I was lucky growing up. My parents never pushed me too far. But they did teach me to push myself — and to try my best. It was the most valuable lesson I've ever learned. It's the same lesson that I try to teach my two sons today. And it's one that I hope you'll try to teach to your children too.

Our children should be encouraged to play sports, for they are a very important part of their lives. They don't need the most expensive skates or equipment. But they do need to have fun. And they do need our confidence and support. For only then can our children realize their full potential. Only then can they achieve their goals.

I believe that we all have a great opportunity to help mold young people's lives through sports — as parents, volunteers, sponsors, and as fans. We are all in positions to make a difference in the lives of our youth, and together we are certain to succeed.

The Bay State Games, an Olympic-style competition designed to help young people achieve personal development through sports, is a great example of how we can all give our children the opportunity to excel in more ways than just winning. The Bay State Games allow thousands of amateur athletes from all across Massachusetts the chance to compete in their favorite sports, and they allow our youths the freedom to just have fun. This year's games will begin with opening ceremonies July 14 and run through July 17 at the MIT, Boston College, UMass-Boston, Boston University and Harvard University campuses.

As Honorary Coach of the 1994 Bay State Games, I'm proud of all the athletes who participate in the games. For in my eyes, they are all winners.

I'm also very proud of all the parents, coaches, and volunteers who have sacrificed so much of their time and given so much of themselves to help make the games happen. They have given thousands of children the chance to have fun, and the chance to learn some lessons that will last a lifetime.

Lastly, as a member of the BayBank team, I'm proud that the company is sponsoring the Bay State Games once again this year. Through BayBank's

Marshfield CC and Cohasset GC to host Ouimet Memorial Golf Tournament

Two of the South Shore's finest golf courses, Marshfield Country Club and Cohasset Golf Club, will host the first two rounds of the 27th Francis Ouimet Memorial Tournament July 27 and 28. The three day event, which draws some of the finest amateur golfers in the Northeast, will conclude with the final round July 29 at Woodland Golf Club.

The Ouimet Memorial, a 54 hole stroke play invitational, is played on a rotating series of courses in Eastern Massachusetts. Proceeds from the event benefit the Francis Ouimet Scholarship Fund.

According to Ouimet Tournament Chairman Richard Connolly, "All of these clubs are very supportive of The Ouimet Fund, and we're thrilled to play the tournament at them. Marshfield is a fine Stiles and Van Cleek design. Cohasset is a fine Donald Ross course, and we feel very honored to be included in their Centennial celebration this year. Woodland was where Mr. Ouimet played as a member and is also a wonderful Ross layout. We've been very fortunate to play our final round there for a number of years."

John Salamone of Framingham is the defending champion, while the South Shore's Bob Bradley of Ponkapoag GC is the only two-time winner of the event.

Greg Norman and John Daly again will headline a long list of celebrities and PGA TOUR players participating in the Willowbend Charity Pro-Am June 27 at Willowbend GC on Cape Cod. Other TOUR stars competing include Mark Calcavecchia, David Frost, John Cook, Larry Mize and Chip Beck. The celebrity list is a regional who's who with the likes of Ray Bourque, Roger Clemens, Adam Oates and John Havlicek.

Tickets may be purchased in advance for $20, or for $30 the day of the event. Call (508) 477-8888.

Local golf fans will be able to get another look at John Daly and his wonderous tee shots at the New England Classic July 21 to 24 at Pleasant Valley CC in Sutton.

Daly has committed to play at PV for the first time since 1991 when he tied for 11th place.

The LPGA Tour makes its annual visit to the South Shore July 28 to 31 when the PING/WELCH's Classic is contested at Blue Hill Country Club in Canton. Missie Berteotti will defend her title against another strong field of LPGA stars.

This year at Blue Hill CC the LPGA and the Women's Golf Association of Massachusetts (WGAM) have teamed up to provide a junior golf clinic Tuesday, July 26, at 4 p.m.

Berteotti will host the clinic which is open to all junior golfers (18 and under who pre-register), and is free of charge. Space, however, is limited to the first 100 juniors who sign up. For information call (617) 891-4200.

Winners of six of this year's Senior PGA tournaments are early entries for the 1994 Bank of Boston Senior Golf Classic Aug. 4 to 7 at Nashawtuc CC in Concord.

Current tour winners playing at Nashawtuc will include Jay Sigel, Tom Wargo, Charles Coody, Rocky Thompson, Larry Gilbert and Jim Albus. Look for several "headliner" Senior Tour stars to commit in the next few weeks.

Qualifying for the Maxfli P.G.A. Junior Boys Championship will begin for South Shore junior golfers June 23 at Braintree Municipal Golf Course. Qualifiers at Braintree GC will move on to the sectional qualifying at Ponkapoag GC in Canton July 7.

Entry fee is $15. Call the NEPGA at (617) 246-4653.

Little League Baseball

Cardinals finish a strong third

The Cardinals had a winning season with a 8-6-4 record, good for a third-place tie with the Red Sox. Everybody on the team contributed. Twelve-year-olds Bill Good, Ryan Hubly and Andrew McAuliff all made this year's All-Star game by swinging some of the hottest bats in the league.

Will McAuliff and Michael Kennedy provided a consistent one-two punch as they led off the batting order by getting on base to set the table for the middle of the lineup. These two also made the All-Star squad.

Morgan Pierson and Danny Williams provided the Cardinals with an outfield that helped track down many fly balls to keep the Cardinals in every game.

Brian Krupchuk also was added to the team about midway through the season, adding speed and spark to the lineup.

All three 10-year-olds had exceptional rookie seasons. Nick Balster's pitching and hitting was exceptional, Greg Ernst's infield play and pitching was a big help and David Devito's pitching performance earned him two wins along the way. It has been a great year for the Cardinals.

Junior Skippers take to the ice

By Kevin Lewis
Special to the Mariner

The Junior Skippers play their first hockey game of the season this Wednesday at the Pilgrim Skating Rink in Hingham. The team is made up of Cohasset boys, whose ages range from 9 to 12.

The team roster includes: Chris Caron, Joel Carpenter, Chris Carr, Sean Chase, John Cotter, Andrew Dennis, David DeVito, Greg Ernst, Brian Lewis, Eric Libby, Will Moody, Jake Morgan, Greg O'Connell, Will Prendergast, Jay Rasmussen, Peter Whoriskey, Tim Straughan and Dan Williams.

The team is coached by Kevin Lewis, Bob Morgan and Mike O'Connell, Cohasset native and current Providence Bruins Head Coach. Bob Moody and Jay Caron manage the team. The goal of the staff is to develop the hockey skills of the Cohasset boys so they can compete at higher levels.

the varsity team, fell behind early by a score of 4-1 before its offense began to grind into a consistent flow.

Cohasset blitzed the bi-town squad by scoring three times in a three-minute span to knot the game at 4 and then taking the lead with one minute remaining.

The Skippers weren't able to escape with the win, however, as Weston/ Wayland swarmed the Cohasset end in the closing seconds and finally beat Kahn with a second remaining for the 5-4 victory.

The JV's best season ever (which included a 13-9 win over Matignon's varsity squad) was capped by John Lacks' second-place finish in the fastest shot contest, held at the jamboree. Lacks' lightning-quick release enabled him to get off a shot measured at 76 mph, just short of the winning mark.

Kahn gave the JV squad a huge boost after starting the season filling in for the injured Brandon DeVoe on varsity. He played three games and finished with a 2-1 record before joining the JVs. Kahn has compiled an impressive 25-3 record over two seasons. Come July, he'll be off to jolly old England for a number of games as a member of the Massachusetts "Dream Team."

We can all learn something from this whole O.J. Simpson episode which transfixed us to our televisions on Friday night.

Charles Barkley's "I am not a role model" statement in his Nike commercial was right on target. This country as a whole is notorious for putting its athletic stars on pedestals as if they can do no wrong.

The good people of Los Angeles and those across the country cheered the Hall of Famer on as he led the Los Angeles Police Department on a highway chase last Friday night. The public acted as though they were extras on the set of "The Legend of Billy Jean."

This, however, was real life folks. It appears the country forgot just how unimportant sports really are. And the fact that the police were in pursuit of a fugitive from justice, wanted for the double murder of his ex-wife and her companion.

When the news first came out that Simpson was a suspect in the murders none of us wanted to believe it. Here was a man who was more than a hero but an American icon. Charismatic, good looking and able to poke fun at himself as he did in the "Naked Gun" movies, it was hard to find a person in the United States who didn't like O.J., football fan or not.

Now, unfortunately, he is being portrayed as the "victim." People just don't get the message. Simpson is still innocent until proven guilty, but his little episode on Friday night should at least knock some sense into the moronic masses that O.J. is no victim, he is not above the law and if found guilty, should receive no special treatment because of his accomplishments on the football field.

Whether that all comes to fruition, however, remains to be seen.

Just remember who the real victims are. The two people who had their lives ended with slashed throats. Two young children, not only having to deal with the death of their mother, but also wondering why their father isn't around to console them. Plus the family, friends and relatives of the victims.

Try to keep that in mind, not the vision of Simpson running down the sideline for a touchdown.

—Joe Reardon

Adult evening tennis lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept ongoing telephone registrations for adult evening tennis classes for all levels of instruction by calling 383-6791.

Classes will be scheduled as follows: beginners, 6 to 7 p.m. Monday. Intermediates, 7 to 8 p.m. Mondays. Advanced 6 to 7 p.m. Wednesdays. Beginners 7 to 8 p.m. Wednesdays.

Martial artist discovers the art of writing

By Suzanne Siteman
Mariner correspondent

Forget those movie-style images of militaresque martial artists; stern and curt and removed. Imagine instead a James Taylor look-alike with a better head of hair; a tall, lean, gentle man with a benevolent smile. Kung Fu instructor John Loupos is a martial artist for the 1990's.

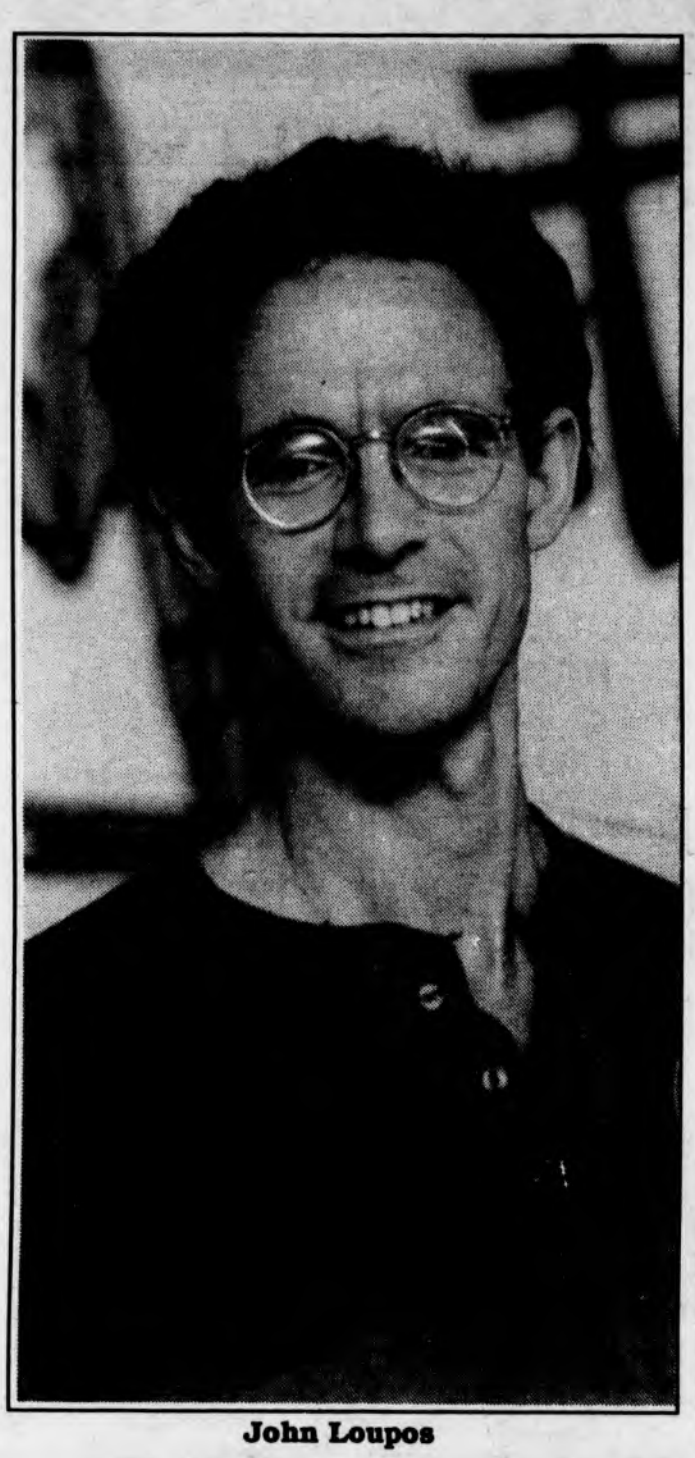
A devotee since age 13, Loupos has been teaching martial arts on the South Shore since 1968. His Wah Lum Academy (meaning flourishing or jade forest), housed in Cohasset, currently serves 100 students, children and adults. Where Loupos and his martial art begin and end are not easily distinguished; he is the embodiment of the respectful, disciplined way of life that Kung Fu advocates.

"In working with children, I'm not as interested in teaching fighting or self-defense as I am in using the martial arts as a tool for personal empowerment and learning to improve their relationship with themselves and others," he explains.

Inspired by his 13 year old son's writing ability, Loupos decided last fall to try to put down on paper much of what he believes can be learned from Kung Fu, a martial art emphasizing grace and fluid movement. The result is a homemade children's book, "Tales and Strategies from the Jade Forest and Beyond," printed and published by Loupos. The spiral-bound book, simply-written, contains eleven stories and exercises that illustrate such principles as personal autonomy, fair play, conflict resolution and personal expression. Each story ends with a thought-provoking list of questions cleverly designed to jump-start conversation between parents and children.

"The common thread in all of the stories is the martial arts," says Loupos, "but it is used as a metaphor for how we live our lives." Lessons of competition, obedience, and self-expression are clearly demonstrated through the fable-like tales that center around children interacting with the world at large.

In the tradition of Kung Fu, instructors are morally responsible for developing and promoting healing. Loupos runs a homeopathic health-care practice, based on his training at the New England School of Homeopathy in Amherst. He is currently taking additional classes to augment his knowledge and skills.



John Loupos

"Tales and Strategies" is likely to be the first in a series of Loupos books, as the process of writing was a thoroughly enjoyable one for the new author. "I had a lot of fun moving from the concept to the actualizati of this book, though the proofing process wa humbling experience!" Loupos admits. "I defini have more stories ready to be told."

"Tales and Strategies from the Jade Forest and Beyond" is available at Wah Lum Academy, Cohasset, or through area bookstores.

At its recent Annual Spring Meeting the PSO membership voted the following Executive Board positions for the 1994-95 school year.

Debbie Shadd, President; Ruth Wilcox, Vice President; Maureen Smith, Corresponding Secretary; Heidi Maitland, Recording Secretary; Helene Lieb and Ed Lappen, Treasurers; Mary Daniels and Linda Simms, Osgood Reps; Linda Bolster and Helene Garber, Deer Hill Reps; Jackie Dinsmore and Karla Watts, Jr. High Reps; Terese D'Urso and Kyle Lubitz, Sr. High Reps; Mary Foley and Susan Pile, Curriculum Enrichment; Kate Abbruzzese, Ed Connolly, Ellen Sanchez, Fundraising; Marilyn Adams and Elaine Davis, Metco; Susan Carr and Susan Turgiss, PSO Activities; Diana Kinch and Pearl Smith, Publicity; Anne Whiteley and Jo-Ann Pilczak, Special Needs; Dan Evans, Community Relations.

In May, the PSO conducted its first elections for parent representatives to the newly formed School Councils for the town's three schools. Elected to two year terms were Betsy Connolly and Kathy O'Neill for the Jr./Sr. High School; Martha Ogrodnik and Elaine Smoot for the Deer Hill School; Jeanne Holway and Patty Smith for the Joseph Osgood School.

The PSO thanks all the parents who helped out in the schools, or helped raise money for the schools, or voted in the above mentioned elections.

Coup to take over water department doused

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

As heat and humidity reached unbearable levels in town hall Monday — Selectman Peter Pratt made body temperatures soar even higher with an unprecedented attempt to wrestle control of the water department from the board elected to run it.

'It catches your attention when the water stops.'

— David Pottenger, 38 Rustic Dr.

Pratt, a former water commissioner, indicted the current water board for what he sees as its failure to handle the town's water emergency.

"I personally don't have confidence in the water department management and with the majority of the elected body there," Pratt said.

Border Street boat yard powwow set

Town and state officials, fishermen, and interested citizens will meet at 11 a.m. Friday (July 1) at the Mill River Marine Railway, Inc., 82 Border St.

Officials from the Department of Environmental Protection are scheduled to make an on-site visit regarding the Environmental Notification Form (ENF) filed by the property's owner William Hanney. The ENF is required for all state Waterways License applications. All owners of waterway structures are required to obtain a license by state law.

Hanney, who reportedly wants to build a residence at the site, is trying to evict the boat yard business from

New plans for Hagerty houses cruise by panel

An antique structure that harbors some of Cohasset's rich history of life boats is sailing closer to being revitalized into an educational and recreational center.

Cohasset teacher Jack Buckley, who has drawn up the paperwork to make the Cohasset Maritime Institute a non-profit corporation, won selectmen's enthusiastic support this week to seek grant money to refurbish the exterior of the boat house on the Hagerty Property.

And Hagerty Committee chairman Vee Roebuck came armed with an estimate on what it will cost to rebuild the structure from the inside out.

Passion for diving inspired champion

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Unlike many athletes who continue to compete well past their prime into the land of mediocrity, Northeastern University diver Jane deLima plans to walk away at the top of her game, or in her case, the 3-meter board.

"It just can't take priority anymore," said the 23-year-old Cohasset resident and college junior. "I've kind of based my life around diving for the last three years so it's time to concentrate on finishing school."

deLima dove in summer meets as a member of the Cohasset Swim Team between the ages of 10-16 and graduated from Milton Academy, which had no team, in '88.

deLima didn't begin to learn the intricacies of the sport until the fall of '90 at Northeastern when she joined the team as a sophomore walk-on. Under head coach Joe Chirico, deLima learned her entire repartee of 3-meter dives and nearly all the ones she went on to use from a meter up.

With Chirico as her coach, deLima began a "pretty

Firefighters buy phone

Thanks to the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804, the town's Council on Aging van has a cellular telephone.

Members of the firefighters' union raised the money to purchase the phone for the shuttle van and paid for the basic service for one year.

Capt. Bob Silvia explained that the telephone can come in handy for everything from obtaining help for a road-side repair to a call for a medical emergency.

COA director, Kathy Bryanton, said senior citizens use the van for trips to the doctor, shopping, banking, or other outings.

She said having the phone available to the driver provides a lot of security. A two-way radio was used previously which was problematic, Bryanton said. The phone is programmed to reach the local police or state police in a matter of seconds.

Town clock to be painted

Noel Ripley and Hamilton Tewksbury have agreed to repair and paint the town clock which is in the First Parish Church steeple for a price.

They will charge the town $975 which they will donate to the Captain's Walk account to go toward the Minot Ledge Light replica project on Government Island.

Ripley told selectmen Monday that it has been 15 years since the clock was refurbished.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said the money could come from the Town Common maintenance fund which contains donated money from movie production companies that have filmed in Cohasset. There is $6,000 in that account, Doyon said.

Ripley will use good quality marine boat paint.

Selectmen gave permission to transfer the money from the Town Common maintenance account to the Captain's Walk account at their board meeting Monday.

Both accounts are kept by the town treasurer.

Town buys graves

The town will buy back four graves at the town-owned Woodside Cemetery for $300 each from David Marks. The graves, which are in a row, are part of family plot.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said the town has a program in place to buy back graves and is allowed under state law to buy them back at more than the original selling price which in this case was about $40.

Graves at Woodside cost $500 now, he said.

Coup to take over doused

Tempers flared over the past several weeks as record demand for water coupled with the town's antiquated system of pipes, pumps and water mains left many of Cohasset coastal residents without water pressure.

Historically that part of town has had water problems but nothing like this.

"It catches your attention when the water stops," David Pottenger, 38 Rustic Dr., told selectmen Monday.

At a meeting last week, water commissioners were in the hot seat as dozens of angry residents from the Jerusalem Road/Linden Drive area demanded answers.

Selectmen called emergency meetings with commissioners and town health and safety officials to come up with short-term solutions to the town's distribution problems and to formulate a plan for a fire emergency.

They also agreed to form a joint committee with water commissioners to work together to solve the town's water problems over the long term.

Although the handful of residents at the selectmen's meeting this week were still angry about their water problems — most said the water department's steps have made a difference.

Over the past ten days, water commissioners enacted a ban on outside watering from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., plugged leaks, fixed a pipe fitting and installed an overground main along Cunningham Bridge, increased hours at the water plant, and replaced elbows in a pumping station with straight pipe to increase the water pressure.

Pratt also asked that an audit of the water department's finances be performed and that a monitoring program of residents' in-ground sprinklers be enacted.

His fellow selectmen supported the audit and monitoring program but would not back setting the legal wheels in motion to take over the water department.

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan said moving toward receivership would be "excessive at this point." He noted that the joint committee of selectmen and water commissioners hadn't been given the chance to work through problems.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the fire department is performing flow tests and the pressure has improved, although it is still below recommended levels for fire suppression purposes. He noted however that water pressure was not good before the recent crisis. He said Cohasset will connect to Hingham water via a hose line to add pressure to Cohasset's system if a fire emergency should arise.

Commissioner William Montouri explained that upgrading the town's distribution system will run into millions of dollars.

"Water rates will be as high as the MWRA's," he said.

Water commission chairman Ronald Goodwin added that the water department has spent $1 million in improvements over the past decade.

Commissioners said money is a problem. And although town accountant Michael Buckley said under state statute water improvements to the Cohasset's system must be paid with water revenue and not from the property taxes, the board will ask the advisory committee for a transfer to pay for engineering and other programs.

Long term plans to alleviate water problems include enacting regular flushing of water mains, a leak detection program, installing a new standpipe on Scituate Hill, and finishing the metering program so the town can accurately track how much water is actually being used. The tracking program will help determine how much water is lost through leaks. The water department is in the process of preparing a proposal to hire an outside contractor to run the department. A private company is running the department in the interim.

the 16,000-square foot harborfront parcel he bought last year.

Facing possible eviction, Frank Carey, owner of the boat repair business for 2-1/2 decades, has filed an appeal to superior court following the May 5 lower court decision for Hanney, who bought the property from Peoples Bank of Boston which had foreclosed on the prior owner. A jury trial will determine whether or not the documents between Hanney and Carey comprise a lease.

In the ENF, Hanney's agent states the property has no historic significance. This statement riled local officials and abutters. The boat house is an antique structure dating back to the mid-1800s and is often referred to as Cohasset's "Motif #1."

Last October, Jeffrey Donzé of Parker Avenue presented selectmen with a petition with 150 signatures asking that the town do all it can to preserve the boat yard. Local fishermen, who see their livelihoods threatened if the boat yard closes, also implored selectmen to act and pursue having Cohasset Harbor declared a protected port by the state.

Modern method provides historians window to past

Several years ago the Cohasset Historical Society instituted a program to modernize the keeping of records relating to its museum, library and archival collections. Initiated by the Curator and approved by the Society's Board of Directors as well as by visiting consultants, a standard museum accessioning system was put in place. This consisted of the assigning of a unique number to each new collections item at the time of its acquisition and the permanent recording of the item and its number, and the identity of its source, whether gift, loan or purchase. The numbering system selected, called the "three number system," has been recommended in a technical text titled "Registration Methods For the Small Museum", written by Daniel B. Riebel and published by the American Association of State and Local History.

The "three number system" assigns to each item a unique number based upon its date of acquisition. The number itself is recorded, along with a brief description of the item, and its source or provenance, in the Society's central Accessions list (now fully computerized). The number also appears on the object itself. Responsibility for maintaining the computer file known as the Accessions Register is assigned, under Society By-Laws, to the Curator, as part of a comprehensive modem written Collections Management Policy. This delegation of responsibility to Curator also is consistent with good practices of modern collections management. Today, museums and Societies are expected to maintain complete and accurate records of their collections holdings as part of their regular functioning, for purposes of identification of collections acquisitions, as well as for the legal protection of the Society.

Since one of the fundamental accession rules is that all areas of collections acquisition use the same accessions numbering system, the Society's museum artifacts, its archives and library and its costumes collection all appear in one series of Accession Books. An important part of the continuing accession project relates to identifying and recording collections material acquired in the past, not all items of which can be traced to the date of acquisition or identity of the donor. For this an adaptation of the same basic numbering system is used, permitting inclusion of the items of unknown origin in the general list.

This coming year the accession lists will reach their century mark, clearly showing the high degree of interest Cohasseters have demonstrated in the continued collecting and preserving of the town's unique history over a century's time.

From the original computerized Accessions Register several specialized catalogs have been created. Largest of these is an extensive costumes and flat fabrics catalog detailing the Society's fabrics collections by category and classification of each object. Currently, other specialized catalogs include one of the Society's library books, of its large collection of photographs, its Maritime artifacts collection, and several other smaller listings. A major catalog development from the original accessions list is an illustrated catalog of the Society's artworks, consisting of oil and watercolor paintings and prints. For this catalog each item has been photographed on 35mm color film, with the photo image affixed to each catalog page adjacent to its printed text.

For purposes of consistency in listing of collections items the Society has turned to another standard text published by American Association of State and Local History: "Standard Nomenclature", compiled by Robert G. Chenhall, a comprehensive compilation widely used in the museum environment for identifying categories and classifications. This assures that all items of like type or class will receive the same descriptive term, an invaluable help in developing collections analysis and specialized catalog listings.

As part of the original accessions project in the latter 1980s the Curator searched Society records going back to the founding of the original Committee On Town History in 1894, to ascertain the origin of many items the source of which had become obscure after nearly a century of continued collecting. Thus, though the entire project is not yet completed, the Society's Accession Register begins with the year date (and accession number) 1894, and continues to date. This coming year the accession lists will reach their century mark, clearly showing the high degree of interest Cohasseters have demonstrated in the continued collecting and preserving of the town's unique history over a century's time.

As for the "three number" system, an example would be: 1994.001.012, the first set of numbers showing the year of acquisition followed by a decimal point. The second set of three numbers indicates the item to be the first acquisition or group of items received in the year, followed by another decimal point. The final group of three numbers shows the actual number of items in that acquisition, in the case shown the item would be the 12th in a group of items, all given by the same person on the same date. This is the standard three number system used by many museums large and small. The adoption of a standard accessioning procedure provides the Society with a complete, accurate and permanent Accessions Register and cataloging system not unlike that used in many of the nation's foremost historical organizations.

Domestic violence crosses. . .

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

Domestic violence is not new, but in recent weeks, it has become news.

This type of abuse and violence has gone on "forever," in the words of one women's advocate, but has been thrust into the spotlight lately following the June 12 murder in Los Angeles of Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman, allegedly by her former husband, football great O. J. Simpson.

And, domestic violence crosses all boundaries: town lines, economic standing, and educational level.

These are the messages sent this week by local victims' advocates and law enforcement personnel who work with victims of domestic abuse.

"Hingham has all the same kinds of problems that other towns have," said Kathy, a advocate for abused women. "Those same problems can be hidden behind fancy houses and manicured lawns."

Hingham police Det. Gerald McInnis was appointed the department's domestic violence officer last January. A 20-year veteran of the department, McInnis has seen changes in the department's policy on domestic violence.

When he first came on the force, he said, police would talk to the husband and wife—and it was always a married couple then. Sometimes, police would take the husband for a ride around town for an hour, to "cool off." But there would be no formal intervention by the police or the courts, McInnis recalled.

The police couldn't arrest a man for threatening to harm a woman, McInnis said. Now, the police can pursue charges on their own, even without having seen the actual physical attack.

The Hingham police now have on file approximately 150 active "209A"s, protective orders that bar a reported abuser from contact with the victim.

Cohasset, a town with a population of approximately 7,000 in 2,200 households, currently has 33 active 209As on file.

Linda Rudnick, executive director of the South Shore Women's Center in Plymouth said that until the 209A law came into existence, "people had a right to abuse their family."

In fact, the 209A law came into existence following a 1978 tragedy in Cohasset.

Police Chief Brian Noonan recalled the incident in Cohasset on Memorial Day that year when a man shot and killed himself and his wife, and wounded their two children. A few hours prior to the shooting, the woman had told a police officer that there were problems at home, Noonan said.

Cohasset, a town with a population of approximately 7,000 in 2,200 households, currently has 33 active 209As on file.

Rudnick said the 209A law has undergone refinements since first enacted. Originally, it offered protection to married persons, or those living in the same household. In 1991, protection of a 209A could be obtained by persons in a significant relationship, although not actually living together.

And last month, Rudnick said, a law was enacted that requires anyone who has been served with a 209A to surrender any guns he has in his possession.

In addition to changes in the law, McInnis notes changes in police procedures that show greater sensitivity.

If the police drive the victim to court, they may go to her home in an unmarked car, wearing civilian clothes, he said, adding this draws less attention from neighbors.

In 1987, Judge Alvin Tamkin asked the South Shore Women's Center to provide victim advocates for abused women at the Hingham District Court. The center's work is funded by contributions, including donations from towns where it provides services to abused women. In 1994, Hingham town meeting voted a $3,000 contribution for the center.

In 1993, the last year for which figures are available, the center assisted more than 1,000 women at four courts in Plymouth County, including 47 Hingham residents at the Hingham District Court.

Kathy and Barbara have both volunteered one day a week at the courthouse, for five and four years, respectively. Both women asked that their last names not be used, explaining that they have been concerned, from time to time, that an irate husband or boyfriend of the women they help would retaliate against them for providing that assistance.

The most dangerous time for a woman is when she asserts herself, when she takes the step to regain control of her life. This is the position that Nicole Simpson was in when she was murdered, Kathy noted.

At the courthouse, Barbara will first ask the woman if she is safe, living at a battered women's shelter or with family or friends, away from her abuser. Then, Barbara will help the woman fill out the form for a 209A protective order, explaining what information is needed. As an advocate, Barbara explains the court procedures, but it is the woman herself who speaks to the judge, who provides the information in her own words.

"She needs to be encouraged to express what she needs," Barbara explained. "This gives her control of the situation, which she hasn't had."

Barbara has observed that some judges are more sensitive than others: some judges will allow a woman to approach the bench and speak confidentially; while others require everyone to use the microphone and speak on the record in open court.

Police and victim advocates all see the same phenomenon of women who don't usually call police the first time they are threatened or abused. And they rarely take action the second time.

"It's usually been going on for months or years," McInnis said.

There is an element of frustration in her advocacy work, Kathy admits. Sometimes a woman will take the step of obtaining a restraining order, and bringing charges against a husband or boyfriend. But when it comes time to extend the order, or for another court appearance, she doesn't show up in court.

"You have to be realistic about what you can and can't do," she said. "Ultimately, people have to make their own decisions."

No one knows why a woman will tolerate the abuse. Some point to women who have been victims as child, or who witnessed abuse in their families. Others believe women with low self-esteem accept the abuse, believing they somehow provoked their abuser, and that he won't do it again.

Barbara, Kathy, and Det. McInnis all point out that some women feel "trapped" in the relationship. A woman without a job, money, a car, with children to support often sees no way out of the relationship.

"Some people we see are really beaten down by years of abuse," Barbara said.

But it is sometimes the presence of children that will make a victim seek protection from the courts.

"When she realizes that her children are seeing this [abuse] and are upset or threatened themselves," that can be the "last straw" that will cause a woman to seek protection, Barbara said.

Obtaining a 209A protective order, and perhaps beginning divorce procedures, are only the first steps in the process of "empowerment," Barbara said.

Women and their children are encouraged to seek counselling, which the South Shore Women's Center offers for women and children.

"So often, domestic violence is defined as a man versus a woman," says Nancy Hoit. "But the children can become the next generation of victim and aggressor."

Hoit, a Hingham resident, is a former president and former executive director of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. She is currently an advisor to Vice President Albert Gore on family policy matters.

Parents, particularly mothers, will try to hide the abuse from the children, "but the children know what's going on," Hoit said.

Children from abusive homes are resilient, she notes, and with counseling, they can overcome the damage caused by living in that environment.

Hoit advises that children from abusive homes need to be encouraged to talk about the problems; they need to express their fears; they need to understand that they are not to blame for the abuse or violence; they need to know that an abusive home is not normal.

"And, they need to be believed," Hoit emphasized.

Often the children are told not to discuss the family's problems to outsiders: teachers, scout leaders, guidance counselors, baby-sitters. And the child may broach the subject in a round-about way, saying, "I have a friend who's afraid of her dad."

According to police and women's advocates, women are, in the overwhelming majority of cases, the victims of domestic violence and abuse. However, Barbara notes that she has assisted gay men who have needed 209As to protect them from abusive partners.

McInnis recalled a case where a wife obtained a 209A against her husband. There had been no physical abuse, but she used the 209A to harass him when she called him to pick up their children for visitation.

"She was abusing the system," he said, adding the husband was "a nervous wreck" and the "kids were put in the middle."

Is there more domestic violence? Or has heightened awareness caused more reporting of it?

Cohasset's Chief Noonan and Rudnick of the Women's Center said they don't know, but both agree that the level of violence—the use of weapons and greater brutality—has increased.

SAVE JUNE 16-18 FOR FESTIVAL ON THE COMMON '95!

around town

by Sallyann Chatterton

Doesn't everyone love to hear a story about a true friendship? Here is a wonderful one for you! When they were five years old, Marley Rabstejnek and Amy Urmson became good friends the day they entered Old Colony Montessori School in Hingham. The friendship continued through Derby Academy and Cohasset High School. Amy went to Wheaton and Marley went to Mount Holyoke but vacations brought them together in the Caribbean, the British Isles, Europe, and eventually a cross country trip that took three months. They settled in the San Francisco area.

Amy stayed to work on her master's degree and met fiancé Kevin.

Marley went to London to study at Sotheby's for two years where she met fiancé Fred. Their engagement announcements are in today's Mari*ner*. In September, Amy will be Marley's maid of honor; and in October, Marley will be Amy's matron of honor.

What marvelous memories they have, and they are just beginning a new series of them.

Fairfield University sends us word that Anastasia F. Pierce, class of '96 majoring in English, has been named to the Dean's List. Studying hard pays off, just ask Anastasia.

Word from Emory University in Georgia is good. Andrew R. Kilgore, son of Mrs. Jo-An R. Kilgore, earned a spot on the Dean's List for the spring semester. Good going, Andrew.

Graduation ceremonies at St. Sebastian's School in Needham took place recently, it was the school's 15th commencement exercise. The Most Reverend John P. Boles, D.D. Auxiliary Bishop of Boston, Secretary of the Board of Trustees, and a member of the Class of 1947, delivered the commencement address. Michael S. Spenlinhauer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Spenlinhauer of Beach St., was one of the graduates, and we congratulate him. Michael will attend Boston College in the fall.

The third annual Mass. Senior Games took place recently, 6,000 athletes competed.

You guessed it, Ellery Clark, now 84, made new records for his age group. Clark, of Boston Athletic Association, won seven gold medals, three silver, ten in all. In 95-degree heat he took golds in hammer, shot, discus, javelin, running. long jump, 200 and 800; silvers in 1,500 meters walk, 100 and 400 meters. That makes 112 gold medals. Following his birthday Aug. 6, Ellery hopes to attain a new competing age group level of 85-89.

His late father Ellery Clark Sr. will be honored in 1996 on the centennial of the first American Olympic team, by issuance of a special stamp series. Senior Clark and the other American first Olympic champions will be remembered by individual stamps, issued by the U.S. Postal Services.

History runs deep in Cohasset.

Dottie Remick has been having a wonderful time lately. Her daughter Diana (Remick) Sorensen, along with her two sons Kristian, age 10, and Parker, age 7, came from Simi Valley in Calif. en route to Raynam, Maine. We can only imagine what a fun time they are all having. Diana, Kristian and Parker must think life quiet here, after the earthquake, fires, mudslides, etc.

A standing ovation goes to Chris Adams and Ben Redfield this week. They were selected members of the South Sectional Lacrosse team, Bay State Games competition commencing in July. This is a very select team folks, let's hope they keep us informed.

There was another newsworthy event that took place last week. Among the students that graduated from Deer Hill was Danielle Anderson, and she was the third generation to do so. Danielle's grandmother, Donna Herbert, graduated in 1957. Danielle's mother, Darla, graduated in 1976. All had their picture taken by the Deer Hill sign.

Michael Ellinger, son of George and Patricia Ellinger of Cohasset, was among more than 500 students graduating from Jacksonville University recently. Michael received a bachelor of science degree in business administration. He was a member of Sigma Chi fraternity. Here's to a super future, Mike!

Bon Voyage to three CHS students who will be spending this summer on AFS programs: Candice Buckley will go to Madrid, Spain; Megan McNamara will go to Switzerland; and Scott Moe is off to France, on the Riviera, no less. AFS is a wonderful program.

Last week they had a little get-together to say goodbye to the kids and to Sondre Hauland, our RFS student from Norway who's been living here in town for the year with the Gray family — Kathy, David, Kendra and Karyn. He'll be missed.

There is one difficult part of the program. According to Lizzie Kuhn, she has information on dozens of students from a variety of countries who are still waiting for host families, and as yet, there's no host family in Cohasset for the coming year. Call Lizzie if you or someone you know is interested.

That's it for this week, don't forget to call me with your news.

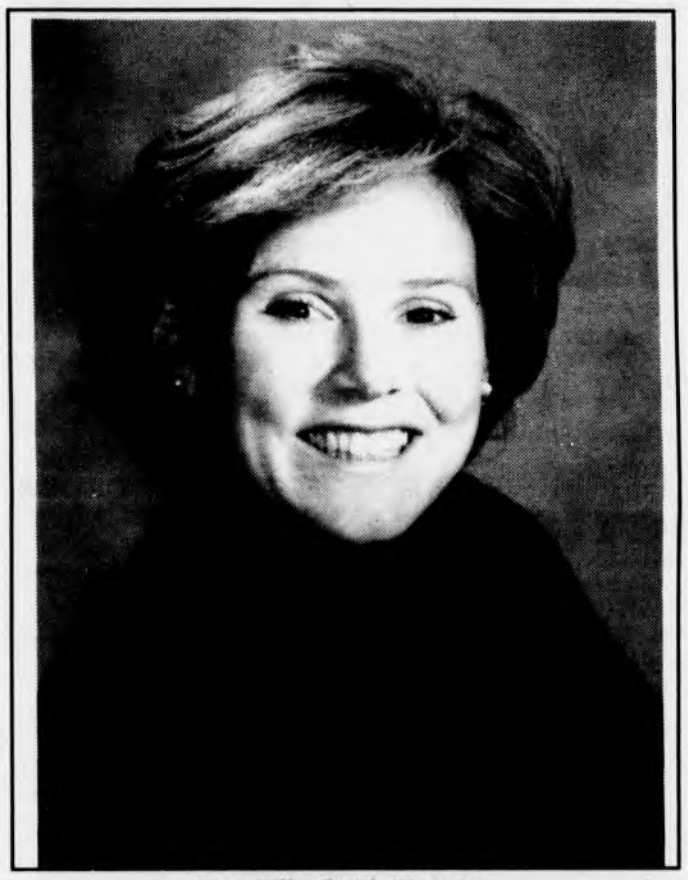
A September wedding is planned.



Amy Elizabeth Urmson

Urmson/Suto

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Urmson of Whitehead Road announce the engagement of their daughter, Amy Elizabeth, to Kevin Daniel Suto, the son of Mrs. Carol Jean Suto of Berkeley, Calif., and Mr. Kevin Francis Suto of Buffalo, N.Y.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of Cohasset High School and Wheaton College. She earned a masters degree in English at San Francisco State. She works as a teacher at Language Pacifica in San Francisco, Calif.

Her fiancé is a graduate of Berkeley High School and the University of California at San Diego. He works as a restaurant manager in Berkeley, Calif.

An October wedding is planned in Cohasset.

'Pierson to Person'

Host Wigmore Pierson will welcome "The Greater Bostonians," music makers for the Jimmy Fund to Scituate High School Thursday June 30. The show will air at 8 p.m. on Channel 53 and members of the public wishing to attend this free concert and TV show are asked to be at the high school no later than 7:30 p.m.

The 50 members of the orchestra and chorus will perform popular music ranging from Hollywood to Broadway.

Joining Wigmore Pierson as co-host will be long-time Red Sox announcer Ken Coleman.

This two-hour special edition of "Pierson to Person," telecast live from Scituate High School, is the season finale to a year in which the Pierson show was recognized by the Massachusetts Cable Commission as the most outstanding TV series in the state. In October, the show will celebrate its 7th year on the air.

The show airs on Channel 53 in Hanover, Hingham, Hull and Norwell; Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset and Scituate.

The miracle worker

School has closed. The corridors are quiet. The bells are still. The chairs are upside-down upon the tables.

The teacher closes the door for the final time this year. It's time for a rest.

Studs Terkel's book "Working" profiles over 100 jobs. But Studs barely scratches the surface of the jobs a teacher does.

A teacher is a counsellor, a nurse, a healer of broken hearts.

A teacher is a police officer watching out for the children's safety.

A teacher is a locksmith unlocking a wonderful world of knowledge.

A teacher is a guide in the adventure of learning.

A teacher is a straight man, a comedian, an actor, a storyteller, a puppeteer.

A teacher is a carpenter with the bulletin board, a bookbinder with Scotch tape, a sanitation worker with the waste basket

A teacher is a banker keeping track of lunch money, ice cream money and milk money.

A teacher is a salesman. The product is knowledge.

A teacher is a hair stylist when a pony tail falls down, a dentist when a tooth falls out, a carpenter when a pencil sharpener falls apart.

A teacher is a waitress at snacktime, a referee at recess time, a doorkeeper at dismissal time.

A teacher is a press agent, a proofreader, a peacemaker, a playmate.

A teacher is a gravedigger if the class pet dies.

A teacher is a detective searching for clues, a lawyer settling disputes, a judge making decisions.

A teacher is a magician changing lessons into magic.

A teacher is a miracle worker taking straight and curved lines and making them into letters, taking letters and making them into words and taking words and making them into ideas.

A teacher is the first one to take the tiny hand of the frightened kindergartner and the last one to shake the proud hand of the high school graduate.

God-bless our teachers.

Rest well.

No easy answers for Little Harbor

(The following is a copy of David E. Clapp's comments to those who are concerned with the environment of the Lagoon at the upper end of Little Harbor.)

Clapp has been involved with wildlife management for 22 years and director of Mass Aububon's South Shore Regional Sanctuary for the past 12 years.)

To the Editor:

The movement of salt water from the Little Harbor side of Nichols Rd. to the Lagoon side has long been a concern of many residents in the Town of Cohasset. There are legal issued related to this water and its flow that will have to be resolved by the Cohasset Conservation Commission during the next several weeks. These issues regard the control of the tidal water and its movements and the effects that such controls will have on adjacent wetlands and the related wildlife communities. The present configuration of road, dam, and stream shows a significant constriction in the width of the flow at Cat Dam under the road, as well as the presence of water regulatory devices.

The range of issues involved in such a matter are complicated and intertwined. My observations from a wildlife point of view are summarized below. The control of the flow, the configuration of the bank, the historic significance, and the effect of various management schemes are best left to the Conservation Commission. Many of the issues related to the Lagoon/ Little Harbor discussions are long-term environmental situations (the presence or absence of algae and the impact of private septic systems are two examples) and others are personal (the esthetics of a "pond" versus the look of a tidal flat). Some of these issues can be regulated by the Conservation Commission under appropriate statutes, others may be negotiated to some extent. It should be remembered that the Conservation Commission is mandated to protect and write requirements (issuance of an Order of Conditions after a filling of a Notice of Intent and the holding of a public hearing) for work on coastal wetlands. The appeal process, for any of these findings, is through the Regional Office of the Department of Environmental Protection (the State) or through the courts. The findings are simply not negotiable within the framework of town government or by private landowners.

With that said, let me comment a bit about the entirety of the Little Harbor complex. The inlet/outlet for this region is narrow. Water reaches the Lagoon at the upper end well after it enters from Cape Cod Bay. This water sheets across a shallow, flat "harbor" as it enters and rises. This water becomes very warm and probably increases in salinity before it exits the harbor at the other end of the tide cycle. This warm water is a good place for the growth of many kinds of plants and animals. There are many forms of microscopic and filamentous algae present and nurtured by the type of water conditions present. The same is true for arthropods and small vertebrates.

There is algae throughout Little Harbor and the Lagoon. An increased flow of tidal water into and out of the Lagoon might have some modest effect on the buildup of algae in the area, but the size and shape of the whole harbor limits any possibility of greatly increasing the flow of water. As a matter of simple geologic fact the whole of Little Harbor is slowly filling in. The day has already arrived when the edges of the harbor sprout more and more Spartina alterniflora, to be followed years later by S. patens. These salt marsh grasses are the two common plants of our estuaries. This change is slowly taking place and, without some drastic change in the configuration of the whole basin, it will slowly proceed. Our children's children will not see Little Harbor quite like it is now.

There are current circumstances which can exacerbate the changes in natural processes. The intrusion of nutrients from septic systems is one way that warm shallow waters become rich in plants and later with the husks and remains of these plants. The increased nutrients hasten the accumulation of materials at the bottom of a water body and create a situation where there are more materials decaying. The control of septic systems, especially older cesspool type systems, is very important along the shores of a shallow lagoon. An increase in the flow of water through an area can help dilute the build-up of chemicals. The maximum flow possible is the best circumstance to slow down culture-aided eutrophication.

The harbor provides a tremendous amount of nutrient material to Cape Cod Bay in its exit water. This water is a veritable soup of organic materials that benefit the food chain of the ocean edge. The coming and going of the tide also creates a beneficial set of circumstances within the harbor itself. There are many creatures that live in the intertidal zone that provide food for migratory birds and tidally migratory fishes. A permanent water cover limits creatures of these types and also limits the feeding opportunities for birds. Only the very long-legged birds can feed in a pool, where creatures of all sizes and stature can feed in a tidally flooded area. The ebb and flood provide an infinite range of feeding circumstances.

From a biological point of view, I feel that the harbor and its food webs would probably be best served by allowing the tide to come and go as naturally as

Cohasset Education Foundation announces projects

By Jim Kinch
Special to the Mariner

May 10, Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) President Rick Shea met with Cohasset teachers to discuss how the CEF is working to bring private investment to the public schools. The CEF identifies projects beyond the scope of the traditional school budget and seeks to develop private resources to fund those projects. Shea presented the five projects for which the CEF is seeking funding for the 1994-95 school year. The projects were also recently showcased in a series of meetings with key community members and include:

Osgood Computer Laboratory: Using portable hardware the students will get exceptional exposure to latest educational computer technology integrated into the daily routine. This project, to which CEF has already donated $10,000, is under construction, with about $17,500 remaining to be raised.

Skillful Teacher Program: A graduated level course to update the instructional skills of all teachers in the Cohasset Public Schools.

Junior/Senior High School Foreign Language Lab: A transportable wireless system to replace the present 25-year-old facility.

Osgood/Deer Hill Naturalist/Scientist and Artist in Residence: Two residencies to enhance the elementary science and art programs.

The CEF seeks to raise approximately $100,000 to fund these projects. In June the CEF received a grant of $1,000 from the South Shore Playhouse Associates toward the Artist in Residence program. The CEF also received a donation of $1,250 from Clark Chatterton which represented his salary for coaching the high school golf team this year. Clark's donation was made in memory of Bernard Mulcahy. Clark noted that Bernie was known throughout the community and his recent passing has left a large void to his many friends and relatives in Cohasset. Bernie's mother, a former principal of the Osgood School, still resides in town. Clark expressed the hope other residents of Cohasset will make a donation to the Cohasset Education Foundation in memory of a loved one and, in so doing, contribute to a most worthy cause, our schools and students.

The Cohasset Education Foundation is a non-profit local education foundation created in 1992 to support and promote academic initiative and excellence in the Cohasset public schools. To learn more about these programs and goals of the CEF and how you can assist, write Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 or call 383-2833.

In a related matter, plans are also moving forward to rent the house which once housed Cohasset Colonials offices and show room.

Exterior facade refurbishing to the boat house will cost about $3,600 and could be covered through the grant sought by Buckley.

The interior repairs including fixing the pilings that support the structure could run as high as $15,000 which can come from money donated by private citizens for Hagerty property work. Roebuck said committee members will donate their expertise in writing the specifications.

The office part of the house also needs re-roofing, Roebuck said, and can be accomplished for less than $5,000.

The Hagerty committee feels that renting the house and showroom is the best solution to tide the town over until a decision is made about the best use for the building. The committee recommends a three-year lease for about $1,000 a month with the lessee picking up utilities.

Paul Pattison of the Hagerty Committee said the lessee's business would be passive "hopefully nautical or historic in nature." Parking for up to seven cars would be limited to the driveway to the left of the house.

Selectmen agreed to allow Pattison to pursue the concept of renting the building and will take a formal vote on the matter when Pattison returns with more definitive details.

Buckley would like the Maritime Institute to enter into a lease agreement with the town similar to the $1 a year lease the Teen Depot group obtained for the Independence Building. Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon will draw up a request for proposal so the town can rent the boat house to a non-profit group.

The Maritime Institute will be comprised of citizens of all ages and will focus on "the tradition of wooden rowing boats," Buckley said.

possible. This would flood the greatest expanse of marsh to the deepest level. If the tide gates were totally removed, there would still be a rather narrow channel for water to flow through to reach the Lagoon. Increasing the water flow beyond the removal of the tide gates might be considered.

I do not envy the Conservation Commission its task of sorting through this issue. But it should be a wonderful learning opportunity, as well as a neighborhood and conservation headache. The loss of functioning salt marsh and estuary along the Eastern seaboard has been of great concern to biologists, fishermen, and other resource users for years and years. Areas that might be reclaimed, with an acceptable impact, should be. The proper function of a harbor, bay, or estuary is important to all oceanic resources and we should be valiant in our efforts to protect and restore those functions whenever possible. Little Harbor in its present configuration (a geological statement) serves to feed fisheries stocks by providing a home for young fishes, as a migratory stopover for birds, and as a scenic addition to the beauty of Cohasset.

Rail questions need answers

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the recent Grimes letter regarding the train issue.

Like many other people in this area, until recently I had been only vaguely aware of discussions on the restoration of the Greenbush line. Recently however, by reading the Mariner and attending two meetings of The Coastal Coalition, I have been made aware of the larger issues of mass transit on the South Shore.

What I have read and heard at these meetings has convinced me there are enough serious issues which must be resolved before this or any other plan is funded.

• I am concerned about the tone of Mr. Grimes' article which seems to imply: We've studied this. Let's fund it and then will work out all the problems. For instance, mention is made in the article that citizen input will be welcomed on the design of fencing which would be installed along the route. It is much more relevant to welcome citizen input on whether or not there should be a train at all rather than on the fence design.

• Much is made of the length of time the pro-train group has been working to "Get Back on Track." Unfortunately, the amount of time studying an issue can be irrelevant. Sometimes events can take so long to come about that technology, life styles, and economics can dictate other solutions and outcomes. This seems to have happened with the restoration of the Greenbush line.

• The amount of money spent studying a problem does not necessarily justify agreeing with the conclusions or recommendations. The expression, "don't throw good money after bad" may have been coined for situations like this.

• There are many issues and details both large and small that are unclear and undecided. In discussing this with other neighbors, not one thinks we should have to wait for approval of the rail line before we get answers to these questions. This is putting "the cart before the horse."

• The repercussions of the line will be felt for generations. Before a $300 million expenditure occurs that will alter the life of the local towns, we need answers.

A wide range of citizen participation should be welcomed now, while the big questions are being asked and answered.

• Mr. Grimes may be too close to the issue to be objective. It has to be difficult to look at the best interest of all because the pro-train group has given so much time and "sweat equity" to this issue. Ten years is a long time to go down, if you'll pardon the pun, one track, only to find the track should be a boat and bus!

To the Editor:

Not only does he give the kids t-shirts at Christmas, chocolate eggs at Easter and ice cream certificates at the end of the year, but he also greets them every day with a big smile and enthusiasm as they enter the bus — what a nice beginning for a kindergartner — thanks, "Captain Morgan," for enriching our children's lives.

Cohasset resident poll

Town departments are considering a new approach to the distribution of parking permits (Sandy Beach, etc.), transfer station permits, dog licenses, and mooring stickers. The proposals calls for establishing a uniform time period from mid-May to mid-June whereby residents could pick up these permits at one location in town hall.

The purchase of dog licenses by mail, and the payment of mooring permit fees by mail will be continued.

School board mulls eight-period per day proposal

By Sean P. Sweeney
Mariner correspondent

The Cohasset School Committee received a status report from Jack DeLorenzo of the Junior/Senior High School at the committee's meeting of June 23 regarding the proposed schedule change to an eight-period day at the school.

According to a summary prepared by DeLorenzo, the eight-period day will increase students' courses by 17 percent and will allow for increased numbers of students in all courses. In addition, the change will increase the number of courses which will have labs. As the schedule presently exists, there are two courses with labs and four courses with built-in labs. In 1994-95, when the new eight-period day would go into effect, there will be 14 classes with labs and six other courses with built-in labs.

Also according to DeLorenzo's summary, the changed schedule will now accommodate team meetings for the staff for grades seven, eight, nine and 10. It will also allow for certain senior teachers to act as advisors to students regarding career and educational choices. This will help to alleviate the heavy workload which presently falls upon the guidance staff in assisting seniors with college choices.

DeLorenzo and the guidance staff will continue to investigate the scheduling change and will report back to the committee before final approval is given for the change.

Deer Hill School Principal Ken Eckberg addressed the school committee on what has come to be known as the open space program. According to Eckberg, this is an inappropriate name and description of the school's program which teams two fifth grade teachers with a sixth grade teacher. The program allows for a two year educational experience for some students in which the same team of educators teachers the children for two school years.

According to Eckberg, two of the biggest criticisms of the program have been that it is made up of an "elitist group of kids" and that it allows for "de facto teacher selection" by parents. These two criticisms are unfounded according to Eckberg.

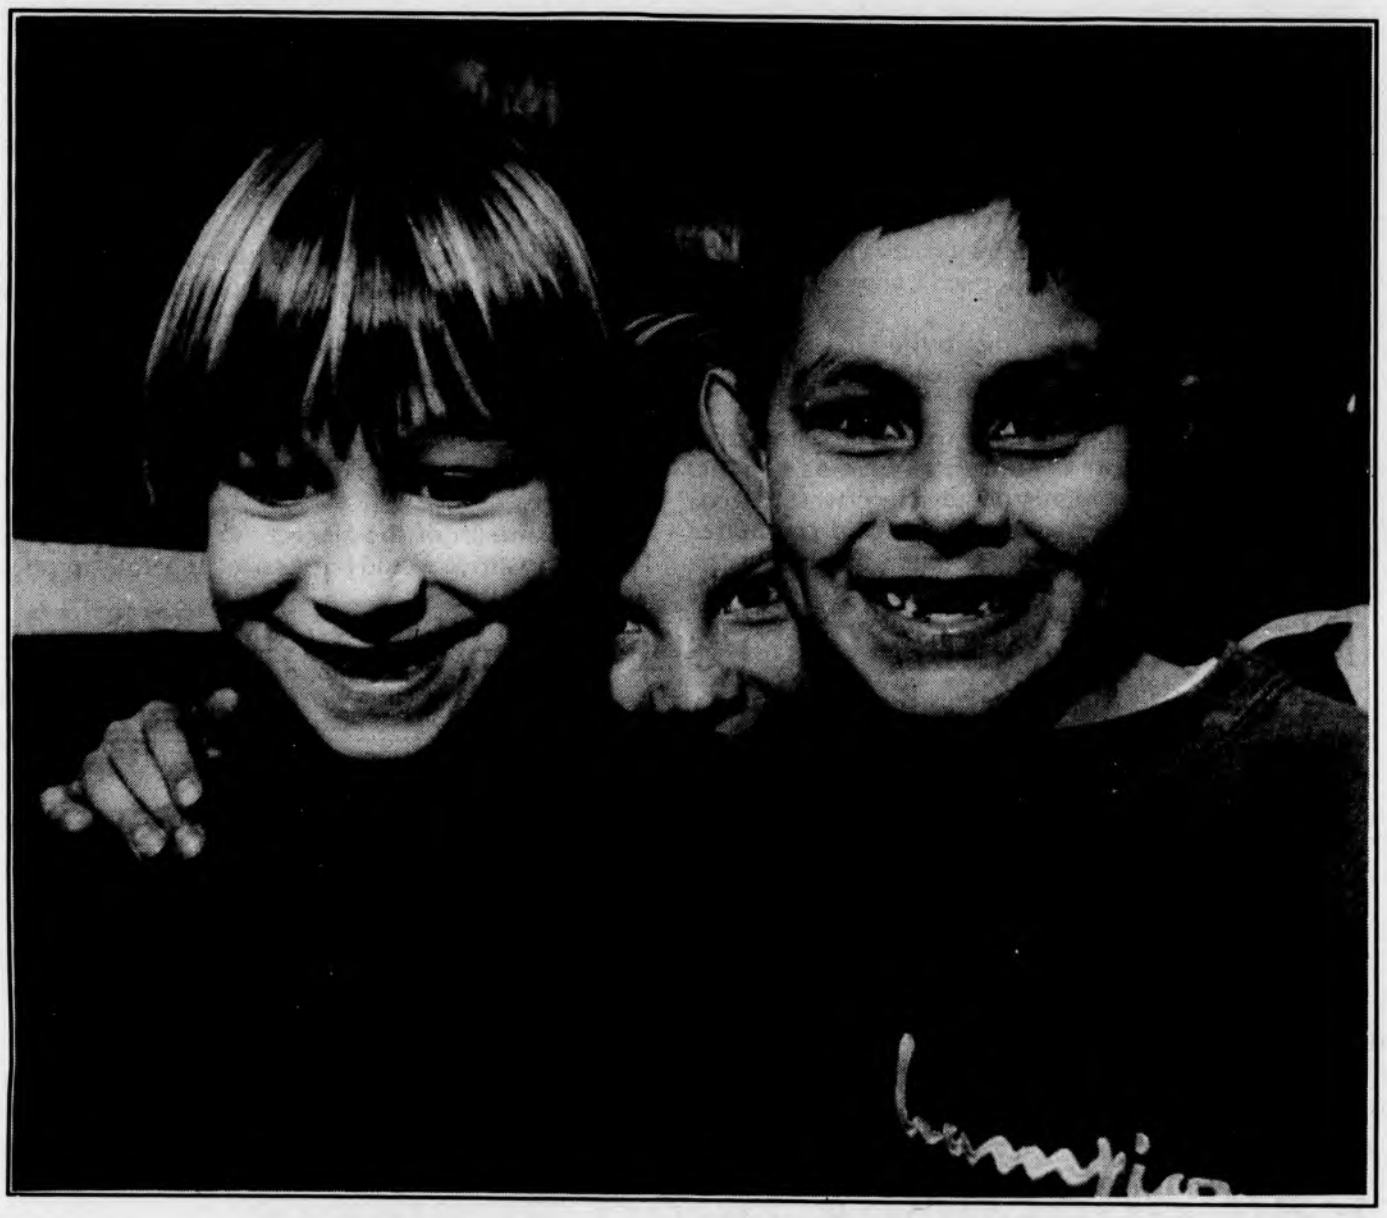
Eckberg presented summaries of recent aptitude scores of fifth and sixth grade students who have experienced the multi-graded experience and others who have followed the traditional single-graded plan. According to the summaries, there is no significant difference between the scores, which would seem to refute the notion of an elitist group of students.

Committee Vice Chairman Ralph Kidder questioned the need for both experiences if they both provide the same result and suggested that the community may be growing confused about the need for both alternatives if no real benefit is gained by the multi-graded experience.

Eckberg seemed to disagree, saying that certain students benefit from the multi-graded experience while others are better served by the single-graded experience. In addition, he stated that not all the teachers agree that the continual two-year program is right for all students.

In other business, the school committee approved the continuation of senior examination exemptions for an additional school year. According to DeLorenzo, teachers were overwhelming in their support for the program which allows seniors to be exempted from second semester final exams if they achieve a high enough grade point average during the year. Supt. Stephen Hart voiced his support for the program, but said that he felt it should not be extended any further than to the seniors. Hart stressed the importance of taking final exams at the earlier grade levels in order to prepare students for college.

The committee also announced the appointment of two new staff members. Diane Barbieri will serve as a third grade teacher at the Osgood School. Barbieri was previously employed by the Scituate school system. Torin Sweeney will return to the Cohasset Schools as a physical education teacher at the Deer Hill School.



Osgood School buddies Andrew O'Keeffe and David Santiago smile for the Mariner lenses. That's Alexine Daniels peeking through!

Dear Hill technology drive

Don't be surprised if you find yourself saving a product label or a cash register receipt. Deer Hill School has enrolled in A+ America, a partnership between families, schools, and local businesses which provides free technology to U.S. schools.

Here's how it works: parents, friends, community leaders and anyone interested in our educational system collect proofs of purchase for products offered by A+ America sponsor companies. Proofs of purchase are then converted into A+ points, which are redeemed by our school for computers, software, TV monitors, etc. Current sponsor companies include Sunoco, H.P. Hood Dairy, Marshalls, Circuit City and many others.

Details have gone home with all Deer Hill students attached to the weekly menu/bulletins. Call the school if you would like more information.

Attractions under the big tents include live Grecian music and dancing, Greek foods and fresh pastries, a beverage and bar tent, boutique and a special children's game tent. A 1957 Chevrolet Bel Air will be raffled.

Admission is free. For information call the church at 383-6380.

Carillon concert July 3

Daniel K. Kehoe, carillonneur of Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., will give a recital in the continuing series of concerts on the Cohasset carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, Sunday, July 3.

Mr. Kehoe's program will feature carillon music by Leen 't Hart and Albert Gerken, transcriptions of pieces by Rachmaninoff, Sousa, and Fernando Sor, hymns, popular songs, a medley from "Les Misérables", and requested selections.

The recital begins at 6 p.m., is free of charge, and will take place rain or shine. In case of rain, the music may be heard from your parked cars. Printed programs will be distributed on the Cohasset Common and in the church courtyard on Highland Ave. Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs and picnic suppers. After the recital, interested persons are invited to gather in the courtyard for a tour of the tower and demonstration of the carillon.

For more information, call St. Stephen's Church, 383-1083 weekdays between 9 a.m. and noon, or the church carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner, at (508) 475-2599, or the assistant carillonneur, Mrs. Mary Kennedy, 383-9599.

SAT/PSAT course offered

The Lishon Center of the Learning Disabilities Network, 72 Sharp St. is offering three writing workshops and a SAT/PSAT preparation and study skills course.

A writing workshop for students in grades 6 through 8 will be held July 11 through 15; for students in grades 9 through 12 from July 18 through 23; and a creative writing FUNshop for students in grades 2 through 6 August 8 through 12.

In addition a SAT/PSAT preparation and study skills course will be offered August 1 through 4 and 8 through 11.

For information call the network office 340-5605.

Opera workshop offered

South Shore Conservatory is introducing an opera workshop for young people ages 8 and up to encourage pre-teen and teenagers to participate in all aspects of opera production.

Directed by voice teacher Sarah Moran Smith, the workshop will touch upon vocal production, technical acumen, choreography, costuming and movement. Smith says the workshop promises to be fun and hopes each student gains a sense of self-esteem and performance proficiency for the experience.

Participants will have the opportunity to test their proficiency at the end of the summer in a performance of short operas.

Offered in Hingham at 3 p.m. Thursdays and 3 p.m. Wednesdays in Duxbury, the workshop costs $50 per student and begins in early July. A solfege class is offered at 2:30 p.m. for interested students at additional cost.

For information call the conservatory at 749-7565 in Hingham or 934-2731 in Duxbury.

New CDROM service

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Cohasset, has two new CDROM services ready for public use. The products are SIRS RESEARCHER and SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER.

The computer workstation and the two CDROM services are on loan for the summer from the Cohasset High School.

Each CDROM can hold nearly 190,000 pages of text.

SIRS (Social Issues Resources Series) RESEARCHER provides full text of thousands of articles selected from over 800 sources from 1988 to the present. These articles relate to the sciences, social issues, global events, historic, economic and political information.

SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER gives full text of selected articles from publications of federal government departments, agencies and commissions. It also includes a congressional directory, with information on U.S. Senate and House members and their staffs.

Both files are searchable by key word, or by subject category, or by names of persons or agencies. Summaries of articles or the articles may be read on screen or printed.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The Flint residence at 89 Border Street displays a black 'quarterboard' with gold -leaf lettering "Homeport," and the front gate beckons visitors to come in and peek at the rock-bordered garden tucked just inside the gate along the front walk. The walk displays a lovely mix of salmon and red tulips, grape hyacinth, delphinium, bleeding heart, and lilies. To the right of the front gate is a raised bed above a stone wall planted with red tulips, grape hyacinth and basket of gold spilling over the edge. This is perfection! Take a ride by and enjoy the color.

(Ed.'s note: the following news and happenings are compiled by the Cohasset Council on Aging, call 383-9112 for more information).

Jack Conroy, a local attorney and CPA, will speak at the Cohasset Council on Aging July 6 at 10 a.m.

Mr. Conway will discuss the basics of estate planning. If you are concerned about this issue and have questions on taxes, probate and wills plan on attending this presentation.

The Council on Aging is located at 3 North Main St. For more information, please call the Council at 383-9112.

Summer swim returns

Date: Tuesdays and Thursdays in July and August.
Time: 11 a.m. to 12:15 p.m.
Fee: $2 per class.
Place: Town pool, Sohier St.
Senior Water Aerobics, Tuesday.
Water Walking, Thursday.
Instructor: Gini Waterman.

No impact or stress to body, yet it is great exercise for toning and strengthening muscles; super for battling or prevention of osteoporosi; enjoy music while you exercise.

Thursday: water walking involves walking in the shallow part of the pool with no impact on your body, work major muscle groups, strengthens, tones, burns calories for weight reduction, (vertical exercise in the water burns 400-1400 calories in one hour).

These classes are for both men and women. For more information call 383-9112.

Volunteers needed

Drivers: The COA is seeking volunteers to drive the Senior Shuttle. The shuttle takes seniors to run local errands, to medical appointments, Sunday church services and once a month to South Shore Plaza and Hanover Mall. Volunteers are asked to drive once a month. This is a great way to meet seniors, to help them and to get involved. Call 383-9112 for more information.

Kitchen help: The COA is also in need of kitchen help for its Tuesday and Thursday lunch programs. Volunteers serve food and drinks and help with set up and clean up. The lunches are fun, informal and...good! Call 383-9112 if interested.

Community garden: The COA has started a community garden located in Wheelwright Park, North Main St. Fuits and vegetables have been planted. If you would like to help water and weed, this is your chance! The fruits and vegetables from the garden will be given to the lunch program, the food pantry and the volunteers. Call 383-9112 if you have a green thumb or want to develop one.

All these opportunities can be applied toward SHARE hours.

Tax Exemption

Do you know that if you are 65 years or older and your gross income does not exceed $40,000 you can defer paying your real estate tax on your home until you sell it.

You must be the owner of record for at least five years and have lived in Massachusetts for at least ten years.

At the time of sale, the full amount of taxes plus five percent per year interest must be paid.

The purpose of this provision is to allow seniors to live out their lives in their own home by giving them some relief from taxes.

There are also provisions for exemptions for $175 and $500 for persons who are blind and for qualified persons who are 70 years or older. For more information, call Town Hall at 383-9900, Ext. 123; ask for the Assessor's Office.

Golfing with the Shark and John Daly

By David McKee
Mariner staff

PGA champion golfer John Daly grabbed the club and drew it back.

With a full rotation and a powerful follow-through, he launched a vicious line drive 250 yards down the middle of the fairway.

Not bad distance for a putter.

Top golfers Greg Norman and John Daly as well as Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens and Dallas Cowboy Emmitt Smith entertained several thousand fans with booming shots at the third annual Children's Charity Pro-Am Golf Tournament at Willowbend Country Club in Mashpee on Monday.

Daly astounded the crowd during a golfing exhibition with Norman prior to the tourney kick-off in the morning.

During the exhibition, Daly, who stands 5' 10 and weighs no more than 175 pounds, drove the ball 250 yards three straight times with his putter.

After the crowd gasped and applauded, he pulled out his driver and launched six straight drives that traveled an estimated 315 yards.

The first two drives were hit with a lit cigarette between his lips.

(Daly, who recently beat an alcohol addiction, still smokes butts like a chimney.)

Norman, a two-time winner of the British Open, then hit four straight drives of 280 yards down the middle for the crowd.

"I have a wife and two kids and can't swing as hard as John does," Norman joked.

"I'm just meaner and stronger than you Greg," Daly shot back.

Norman, decked out his signature White Shark Reebok golf hat, then asked Daly how he hits the ball that extra distance.

"I just do everything full-tilt," he said. "I never had lessons and always swung as hard as I could. Plus if I'm pissed off at someone, I take it out on the ball."

But Daly admitted his powerful stroke was developed as a young boy.

"I had mid-size clubs as a boy and the club used to hit the ground when I drew it back," he said. "I never went to smaller clubs even after my father said he'd buy me some. I think those mid-size clubs led to the big arc in my swing."

Passion for diving inspired New England champion intense" training program from mid September to early May, which not only included perfecting her dives but also weights. She practiced twice a day, three days a week and had scheduled workouts on three others. Sundays were deLima's one day off.

Although deLima is still not 100 percent sure she has dived competitively for the final time, her '93-94 campaign on the board was without a doubt her career season to date. The strain and dedication she put into her training paid off immensely when the big meets arrived at the end of the season.

deLima no doubt will forget her February accomplishments anytime too soon.

After winning the 3-meter event and finishing second in the 1-meter board at the New England Championships as a middler, and coming away victorious in the two dives at the North Atlantic Coast Championships, deLima one-upped herself this winter by capturing the same three events and adding the NEC 1-meter title in the process.

deLima's performances were noticed at the national level and she had the distinction of being the only female New Englander invited to the America Cup Invitational in Austin, Texas.

deLima admits she was somewhat intimidated by the quality of the competition and was hoping only for solid scores on her dives. "There were people doing dives I had only seen on television," said deLima. "There was really a good quality of divers there.

"I went in thinking I'd be completely outclassed."

deLima said she was "very pleased" with her dives and wound up in the top third of the 70-diver field.

Unlike the regular-season swim meets, which moved at a fairly brisk pace with fewer competitors, the postseason championships were a completely different animal. Because of the long wait between dives, deLima had to maintain that fine line between relaxation and staying alert.

"The competition at the end of the season are usually hours long," deLima explained. "I had to be able to relax between dives then be right on again.

"The trick is not to relax too much because if you let your energy level slip too far, you're sunk."

Her America Cup finish proved to be the clincher for deLima. As far as the Northeastern Athletic Department was concerned, her near-flawless 3.9 cumulative average and unparalleled diving excellence were good enough to be recognized at an awards banquet as Northeastern's Outstanding Female/Scholar Athlete.

New England Diving Champion Jane deLima was named Northeastern University's Outstanding Female Scholar/Athlete for the '93-94 year.

"I was very honored," deLima said. "It turns out the athletic department only gives it to one male and female and that's it. So, yes, it was a big honor."

There will be no diving for deLima this fall as she, and 24 other students chosen from across the country, will be spending the semester working on a research project on a game reserve in Kenya.

The opportunity was one deLima simply couldn't pass up.

"I've wanted to go to Africa my whole life so I'm really excited," she said.

A biology major, deLima said the main focus of the work will be spent studying the ecosystem of the area. "The one basic problem is that the increasing population puts a demand on the land and animals," she said.

deLima plans to split her summer between preparing for her trip to Africa and coaching the Cohasset Swim Team divers for the ninth year.

"I love it," she said. "I absolutely love it. Because I really like the sport so much, I enjoy bringing kids into the sport and having them enjoy it as well."

That's no surprise. When asked what she considered to be her greatest strength, it wasn't technique, athletic ability or mental toughness. deLima considers her passion for the sport as the main reason for her success.

"I love it," she again said. "I think people can tell when they see me dive. I know people have come up to me and said 'It's really obvious you enjoy what you do.'" deLima may have some dives left in her after all.

Everyone has a job to do in the summer.

Even South Shore high school and college sports stars.

When the sports season ends, it is time to enter the real world, even if it is just for the summer.

Just about every high school athlete or college athlete has some sort of summer job to help pay for college tuition or books.

And even those fortunate enough to have scholarships or wealthy parents still keep busy with internships or volunteer work.

Last week, I ran into former Scituate High football and track star Joe Hayes, who was working as a doorman at a sports bar.

Hayes, a top football and track star at SHS, is entering his junior year in at Springfield College and said he has several summer jobs to help pay for college expenses.

In addition, I saw Marshfield High soccer star Jesse Ricardo working at a restaurant in Scituate.

Ricardo, who led the MHS girls' soccer team to the Division 1 South finals in her senior season, was also the Homecoming Queen this year.

However, it is summer and there are books to buy for the fall.

Therefore, even Homecoming Queens, like Ricardo, and football heroes like Hayes, have to put in some hours on the clock.

(One high school athlete, a state champ in track, who I wrote a feature on last week, sounded desperate about trying to find summer employment. "I think I might get a job at Pizzeria Uno's," she said at one point. "But I still have to see some guy.")

In fact, summer employment sometimes cuts into sports performance.

American Legion baseball line-ups are often filled out on one criteria: Who can get off work and show up on time.

Other athletes who plan on lifting weights and jogging every day in the summer to get ready for the fall season are often told by mom and dad, "Son your biceps look great, but if you don't find a job, you're not going back to college and you can look at your biceps for the rest of your life."

Sports is not reality.

At some point, even the best of high school and college athletes have to deal with concerns like paying the tuition or paying off a student loan.

And no one cares how many touchdowns you scored on Thanksgiving when it comes to the bottom line.

So, for all those high school and college student-athletes slogging away at lousy summer jobs that pay peanuts, remember one important lesson: "There ain't no shame in this game."

Lacrosse skill development clinics

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations at its office, at 383-6791, for an evening lacrosse skill development program designed for youngsters who will enter grades 4, 5, and 6 in September, 1994.

The youngsters will meet Tuesday evenings from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at the Osgood School Field beginning Tuesday, July 12 through August 16.

This specialized developmental program will be instructed by local college and high school lacrosse players and the fee will be $24 per person for the six-week session. Participants will need a helmet and lacrosse stick to enroll. Other equipment will be unnecessary as no contact scrimmages will be held.

For those unaware, Stevens, who was knocked unconscious by a check, fell face first right onto the ice against the Islanders last year in the Stanley Cup Playoffs.

His nose, face and forehead were all broken.

Eventually, a steel plate was placed in his forehead after a delicate operation.

Anyway, Stevens came back to have a solid season of 41 goals after his serious injury.

He did not hit 50, as he did the previous two years. (By the way both years, the Penguins won the Stanley Cup.) But he was still a force on the left wing.

Look for Stevens to bounce back and hit 50 goals this season and regain his title of best left wing in hockey.

The O.J. Simpson "saga" not only has the public been mesmerized by its daily coverage and turn of events (ie. the hiring of high-profile attorneys F. Lee Bailey and Alan Dershowitz), but the case has transcended over into the sports cards business.

Simpson cards, game shirts, autographs and other paraphernalia are in demand throughout the nation, and that includes the immediate region.

Chris Yourell, owner of "South Shore Sports Cards" in Braintree hadn't sold and O.J. card in a year. But when Simpson was arrested on murder charges, Yourell sold six within days of each other. The cards, all from the early and mid '70s, ranged in value from $5-25 and all were purchased at full book value, a rarity in the business.

Yourell does have two of Simpson's rookie cards, but said they're not up for sale. "I wouldn't sell them even if this didn't happen," he said. "O.J. was great on the field and everyone should have a rookie card."

Cohasset Landsharks 1994 schedule

Date	Day	Opponent	Location	Time
July 6	Wednesday	Kingston	Home	6 p.m.
7	Thursday	Duxbury	Away	7:30 p.m.
8	Friday	Pembroke-Halifax	Home	6 p.m.
13	Wednesday	Carver	home	6 p.m.

All Landsharks will meet at the field at 5:15 p.m. for all home games. Away game meeting time at Milliken will be announced for each game.

Baseball camp begins June 27

The South Shore Baseball Club of Hingham will conduct a one-week instructional baseball camp for boys and girls five to 18 years of age at Miliken Field in Cohasset from Monday, June 27 through Friday, July 1.

Daily sessions for eight to 18-year-olds will be held Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., and for five to seven-year-olds from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m., rain or shine. Campers will be divided into groups according to age, physical maturity and experience. Daily instruction includes batting and fielding practices, demonstrations, and games. There will also be appearances by Pawtucket Red Sox players as their schedules permit.

Cost for the five-day program is $120 per person for the full-day schedule and $70 for the half-day sessions. For registration forms and information, please call the Cohasset Recreation Commission at 383-6791.

Summer gymnastics program

The South Shore Community Center of Cohasset Gymnasts in Motion program is now taking registration for the summer. Summer regular classes for 3-year-olds, 4-5-year-olds, beginners and intermediates of all ages are available Mondays beginning July 11. Classes run for a period of six weeks at a cost of $39. Call the center for more information at 383-0088.

Summer team workouts are also available.

Gymnastic camp will be held August 29, 30 and 31 from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at a cost of $39 for the three days for girls ages 6 to 17.

Fall classes resume Tuesday, Sept. 6.

Shark and John Daly. . .

Norman, who stands 6' and weighs about 170 pounds, offered the crowd a few lessons in the game while effortlessly launching deadly accurate wedge shots of 150 yards.

Each shot landed several feet away from the hole of the practice green.

"Good golfers have consistent rhythm," he said. "Watch some of the guys today. There are a many different swings, but a key is to have consistent rhythm. That is often overlooked. All the best players have it."

As for the tournament itself, Norman, Daly, Clemens and Smith drew the biggest crowds.

On the second hole of play, Daly called on a young boy from the crowd and let him putt.

"Are you nervous," Daly asked.

"Oh yeah," the boy said. He proceeded to miss the putt.

Daly also liked to have fun on the course.

At one hole, he picked up his golf ball and played catch with his caddy, throwing the ball over the heads of his partners.

Daly also chatted with the fans and signed numerous autographs.

As for Norman, who defends his British Open title later this month, he held the crowd in the palm of his hand with his long drives and consistent approach shots.

He also chatted with the crowd along the way and signed many autographs.

The same could not be said for Smith, who refused to sign any autographs, despite being paired with the outgoing Norman.

At one point, Smith wouldn't sign a football for use at a charity auction.

As for his golf game, the Super Bowl MVP should not quit his day job.

Clemens, who brought along his wife and two sons, hit the ball very far but had a rough touch around the greens.

He was one of the largest golfers in the tournament standing 6' 4" and weighing 225 pounds or so.

The Willowbend Country Club, the site of the tourney, is owned by Reebok owner Paul Fireman.

The course was challenging with a lot of water and rolling greens.

Some of the other celebrities playing included tennis player Jimmy Connors, Patriots owner Bob Kraft and former Celtics great John Havlicek.

(Connors was gracious to the many fans and stood for three attempts at a photo with one fan.)

As for the golf pros, in addition to Norman and Daly, there were British Open champions Ian Baker-Finch and Mark Calcaveccia, PGA champion Hal Sutton, Masters Champion Larry Mize and last week's winner of the Greater Hartford Open David Frost.

Without a doubt, it was some of the best golf Southeastern New England has ever seen.

Joining Smith in the Prima Dona department during the tourney was pro golfer Bruce Lietzke.

He signed only a few autographs and gunned the engine on his golf cart to outrace an elderly man seeking an autograph on the ninth hole.

Lietzke, whose claim to fame is winning the Southwestern Bell Colonial, was also 25 pounds overweight and used a strange oversized putter that reached his chin.

Hanover's Richard Weilan, of Paine Webber was one of the many amateur players who played in the charity tourney.

"This is for a great cause and I had a great time," he said. "I met a lot of the golfers like Norman at the dinner the night before and they are regular guys."

In fact after Norman finished his round, he shook hands and signed autographs in the clubhouse while dressed in blue jeans and moccasins.

Golfers entered in sweepstakes

Leslie Chamberlain and Richard Towle Jr., both of Cohasset, and Wesley F. Rydin of Hingham, recently scored holes-in-one at Cohasset Golf Club.

They are all entered in the 34th annual Drambuie Rusty Nail Hole-In-One Sweepstakes.

Chamberlain's 131-yard-ace was scored at hole No. 2 May 11. Towle's 39 yard ace was scored at hole No. 6 May 15, and Rydin registered his shot on hole No. 2 April 23.

Gene R. Peterson Jr., the golf professional who validated the sweepstakes entries, and the three golfers are eligible to win the grand prize, a one-week trip for two to Scotland, VIP tour of the Drambuie Liqueur Co., Ltd., and $1,000 cash.

South Shore Youth Track practices set thru August

South Shore Youth Track practices will be held every Monday and Wednesday from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. at Norwell High School through August 3.

The track club is sponsored by the Norwell Boosters Club and is open to youths age 7-18 from all South Shore towns.

The club offers a fun, low-key introduction to the sport of track and field. It will not be mandatory to attend all practice sessions.

The club will participate in local youth track meets, the Hersey Games and Junior Olympics competions.

Norwell High school girls' head coach Chuck Martin will be managing and coaching the South Shore Track Club.

In the last six years, Martin has coached five divisional state championship teams and had three state runner-up teams while coaching at Notre Dame Academy and Norwell High School.

Assisting with the club is former NHS track stand-out Alicia Porro, a high school triple jump All-American. She is currently on the track team at Penn State.

South Shore Track Club uniforms will be provided to all participants.

The fee is $50.

For more information call Chuck Martin at 617-391-0458.

Ping Welch's tickets for sale

Tickets are now on sale for the 1994 Ping Welch's championship at the Blue Hill Country Club. This 72 hole tournament, an annual stop on the LPGA Tour, will be contested the week of July 25-31. Local golf fans will be pleased with the ticket prices for advance purchase.

Good-Any-Day tickets are available via advance purchase for $12 and are acceptable for any day of tournament week. Season badges, a fan favorite, are $50 and include week long admission to the clubhouse and grounds. The Flex book, for $95, is composed of 10 Good-Any-Day tickets. Fans are encouraged to purchase early and save as ticket prices will increase starting June 25.

Ticket information can be obtained by calling the Tournament Office at 617-965-4114. For an official ticket brochure, golf fans can call the tournament directly or write to the following address: Ping Welch's Championship, 1320 Centre St., Suite 206, Newton Center, MA 02159.

Hingham's July 4th road race

Hingham's July 4th road race, organized by the Hingham Recreation Commission for the benefit of the Hingham High School Scholarship Fund and Hingham Recreation Center, will take place July 4 starting at 7 a.m.

The 4.6 mile course starts on Main Street at Hingham Junior High School and runs down Main Street, finishing under the American Flag in Hingham Square.

Awards will be presented to the first three men and first three women in the following age categories: 10 and under, 11 to 15, 16 to 19, 20 to 29, 30 to 39, 40 to 49, 50 to 59, 60 and over.

The entry fee is $7 advance registration (advance registration closes June 28) and $10 post registration. Pick up numbers at Hingham Junior High July 4 from 6 to 6:50 a.m.

Tee shirts will be distributed at the start to all registrants.

Rest rooms and locker rooms will be available at Hingham Junior High Gymnasium.

The award presentations will take place on the steps of Loring Hall.

Mail applications to: 4th of July Race, P.O. Box 175, Hingham, MA 02043, with checks made payable to Hingham Recreation.

For further information call the recreation department at 617-741-1464.

Horse shows scheduled

Ledgewood Farm, Washington St., Pembroke, will be the scene of a series of two horse shows this season to benefit the Norfolk County Equestrians 4-H Club.

The shows will offer six divisions, Pony, Beginner, Adult, English, Western and Low Hunter, with a trophy and eight ribbons awarded in each of the 42 classes.

The series will offer season-end awards in the six divisions, as well as Champion and Grand Champion awards in equitation, both English and Western.

Spectators are invited to attend these shows for which there is no admission charge. Attendees are advised to bring their own folding chairs, as there is no seating provided. The 4-H parents will be staffing the food booth, so lunch will be available on the grounds. Ledgewood Farms boasts a spacious indoor arena for use in case of inclement weather. A day at the horse show is a great family outing, especially if there are youngsters (or oldsters) in the family interested in horse activities.

Club members will be the show crew, and include Julie Nelson of Holbrook, Alison McLaughlin of Braintree, Lindsay McIntyre of Whitman, Leigh Ann Philips of Whitman, Karen Cassidy and Meaghan McDermott of Randolph, and club president, Beverly Gunther of Quincy. Mrs. June Philips and her daughter, Christine Philips of St. Moritz Stable in Quincy are assistant leaders in the Norfolk County Equestrians 4-H Club.

This is one of the oldest, and most active clubs in the area.

Club leader Mrs. Pat McDermott of Randolph is the show manager, and has set the entry fees at $6 for pre-entries and $8 for post entries. A special discount is offered to pre-entered 4-H members of $4 per class.

The two shows in the series will be held July 31 and October 16.

Ledgewood Farm is located on Route 53, between Route 139 and Route 14. The farm has ample parking for spectators and exhibitors.

Montage of seafaring past lights up new mural

By Judith Brennan
Mariner correspondent

Off to an enthusiastic start — that was the reaction to Heidi Schork and her high school students as they began the much-anticipated mural on the wall of Pat Gentile's barber shop next to the South Shore Art Center. Even Pat, the only one with reservations about the project, got caught up in the enthusiasm.

"When they first approached me with the idea of a mural on my wall, I had some reservations and concerns. I didn't want to wind up with a terrible looking wall. But since Heidi showed me her drawing and I can see how it's turning out, I think I'm going to like it," said Pat. He went on to say how he "especially liked the way the colors in the mural drew the two buildings together."

Schork has created a montage of the town's rich history and expressed it in layers of vignettes and symbols. The observer will be pulled into the present through the perspective of the distant seafaring past. Standing and looking at the wall is much like peeling an onion. Each layer reveals some aspect of the town's history, most of which was provided by local town historian, David Wadsworth, who is also curator of the Maritime Museum. He shared stories and many wonderful old photographs with the artist.

As you stand looking at the mural, in the lower right there is a vignette depicting the town pier with the old Salt House and other early buildings. To the side of that sits Southward Pratt, one of the town's early merchant captains. Towards the lower left is an artist under an umbrella overlooking the sea. She sits on a granite rock covered with an Alabama shawl which was part of the cargo salvaged from the wreck of the Alabama in the mid 1800's.

The famous wreck of the British brig St. John out of Galway which broke up on Grampas Ledge off Minot Light on October of 1849 is in the upper middle of the mural. Forty-five unidentified Irish immigrants of the 99 that drowned that fateful night are buried under a Celtic cross in Central Cemetery.

Other symbols representative of the town's history are the corn and arrowheads associated with the Quonahassit Indians, a codfish weather vane symbolizing the fishing industry, and a China plate reminding us of the extent of our far-flung merchant trade. And, of course, you will see sails, important in the town's shipping past and today, to recreation and sport.

Sixteen-year-old Jessica Hurly, one of the five students who worked on the project, explained that "like the sailors of long ago, us kids will leave the town and go out into the world only to come back with our own stories and experiences to add to the town's heritage."

Coincidentally Jessica has some previous experience. She painted a 1-1/2 story mural for her parents in the vestibule of their family home on Border St.

Other young Cohasset artists assisting in the creation of this piece of art are Simone Carlisle, Kevin O'Donnell, Amy Silvia, and Fay Menis.

The unveiling of finished project took place on June 19 to coincide with the opening of the annual South Shore Arts Festival on Cohasset Common. It could also spur renewed interest in visiting the local museums.

Rabid raccoon arrives on July 4

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Edward and Alex Guild, 430 Atlantic Ave., recently read about the spread of rabies in the newspaper and noted that there had been no confirmed cases in Cohasset or neighboring towns.

They had no way of knowing then that the first case of rabies in town would literally turn up on their doorstep.

According to Health Board Chairman William Baird a raccoon recovered from the Guilds' front yard July 4, has tested positive for the dreaded disease.

And although local officials knew it was just a matter of time, they were surprised that the first case would show up along the town's coast.

"We expected it to come through Wompatuck State Park," Baird said.

Andrew Guild, 9, initially spotted the raccoon and thought it was a cat.

Water ban lifted; Goodwin resigns

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

In a surprise move, Ronald H. Goodwin resigned from the water commission Tuesday night. Goodwin told fellow commissioners William I. Montouri and Frederick Koed he hoped his action would end the political firestorm the commission has been embroiled in.

The commission also voted to ease the ban on outdoor watering.

Beginning today, residents will be able to sprinkle their lawns and fill pools using hand-held hoses only between the hours of 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. After 6 p.m. there are no restrictions on outdoor watering.

If pressure problems resurface, the commission is prepared to restore the 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. restriction immediately.

According to officials, the hand-held hose restriction

Fishermen, lawyer face off over future of boat yard

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Cohasset fishermen are panicked that a wealthy executive is going to squeeze out a boat yard business that their livelihood depends on.

And as they met with state and local officials last Friday, no assurances from the landlord's lawyer could allay their concerns.

Herbert Jason, a Cohasset fisherman for 60 of this 80 years, said he's seen too many things go.

"This yard is our life's blood here," he said. "I've watched fishermen get pushed from place to place by the big buck guys.

"I don't believe you. I can't trust what you say."

Speaking for property owner William Hanney, president of the Stoughton-based Entertainment Cinemas, Cohasset attorney Charles Humphreys said Hanney's perception of what he can and cannot do at the site since he purchased it a year ago has evolved.

Hanney bought the 16,000-square foot parcel which includes piers and three wooden buildings housing the boat yard from Peoples' Bank of Brockton which had foreclosed on the prior owner.

Humphreys said Hanney now realizes that the property has to have a "water-dependent use" to meet state regulations. His plan includes creating a residence

O'Connell named assistant GM of Bruins

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Earlier this year the Boston Red Sox hired Dan Duquette, a young and very capable front office man, to lead the team into the next century.

On Tuesday, the Boston Bruins made a similar move by naming Cohasset's Mike O'Connell as assistant general manager.

O'Connell, 38, a former defenseman for the Blackhawks, Bruins and Red Wings, takes over the position vacated by Mike Milbury.

O'Connell will eventually become the top hockey man for the Bruins when current general manager Harry Sinden steps down.

Sinden, who has been in the Bruin organization since the late 60s, said he will vacate his position

Cohasset's week

Mosquito control update

This past winter, with its abundant snowfall, has produced conditions favorable to a great proliferation of mosquitoes. The standing water left behind as the snow melted provided the ideal breeding ground for these insects. We can therefore expect unusual mosquito activity for the next three months.

The recent two-week dry period caused interrupted flow in many watercourses, with resultant stagnant pools. These are especially fertile breeding grounds.

There is much the individual homeowner can do to reduce the mosquito population. Mosquitoes do not breed in running water. First and foremost, if any watercourses on your property are blocked, clear them so that we can flow freely.

Second, make sure that no standing water exists in gutters, old tires, outdoor buckets and toys.

Third, make sure that water is changed in bird-baths and wading pools at least twice a week.

If a body of stagnant water of moderate size exists on your property, it can be treated with mosquito dunks obtainable at hardware stores or garden centers. These products are biologically safe for humans and pets but destroy mosquitoes in the larval stage before they hatch as biting pests. One dunk will treat 100 square feet of water for 30 days.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee is available to advise residents. To report a problem, call the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-9900, ext. 121.

Court hearing is today

Joseph "Skinny" Laugelle will plead not guilty today at Quincy District Court to charges of disseminating obscene materials to a minor, according to his attorney A. John Pappalardo.

Laugelle, director of Cohasset's recycling center pleaded not guilty on May 3 to two counts of indecent assault and battery on a child under the age of 14, and two counts of indecent assault and battery on a child over 14.

Pappalardo said Tuesday he will ask the judge to consolidate these additional charges with the earlier ones, since all complaints originate from the same alleged victims, who are members of the same family.

Nina Flaherty, spokeswoman for Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt, refused to comment on the charges against Laugelle since they involved juveniles.

Laugelle, a resident of King Street, has been free on personal recognizance.

Happy Birthday, USA!

Police sponsor alcohol awareness seminar

Unfortunately, summertime and arrests for underage drinking often go together.

But Cohasset police hope to turn that trend around.

Through the efforts of Safety Officer Clifton Jones, the department is sponsoring a tri-town alcohol awareness seminar form 9 a.m. to noon, July 14 at the Chart House.

The event is being paid for through the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau.

Cohasset, Scituate, and Hull liquor license holders and their staffs are invited to the workshop which will include segments on civil liability, Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC) rules and regulations, licensing polices, how to spot fake or altered IDs, and "TIPS" (Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of Alcohol) training.

Ronald S. Beitman, Esq., a nationally recognized authority on drunk driving litigation; Mike Marcantonio, master trainer "TIPS" Program; Pam Nourse, ABCC commissioner; and Regina Thomas, Register of Motor Vehicles education liaison, will address liquor license holders at the seminar.

The focus will be on the liability issues they face when serving alcohol and how to have a positive impact on the status of drunk driving and underage drinking in our area.

For more information or to register, please call 383-1055.

Jones said he learned of the program at a regional meeting.

"I ran it (program) by the chief (Brian Noonan) and he's all for it," Jones said.

Graves correction noted

The town will buy back four graves at the town-owned Woodside Cemetery for $300 each from Mr. and Mrs. David Richter. Last week, the Cohasset Mariner incorectly reported the graves belonged to David Marks. The graves, which are in a row, are part of family plot.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said the town has a program in place to buy back graves and is allowed under state law to buy them back at more than the original selling price which in this case was about $40.

Graves at Woodside cost $500 now, he said.

New town sealer needed

Lot E. Bates, Jr. said he plans to step down as the town's sealer of weights and measures as soon as a replacement can be found.

Interested applicants should leave their name at the selectmen's office. For information on qualifications, call 383-9900.

THE BEST ADVERTISING

QUESTION: Why can't I sell my home as effectively as a Realtor? Advertising is advertising, right?

ANSWER: Do you want to ADVERTISE your home or do you want to SELL it? Will your" For Sale By Owners" sign be seen by enough - or any - prospects? Newspaper advertising can become more costly and less effective than you think if done improperly. You may be inundated with curiosity seekers The reason for advertising is to attract prospects who are ready, willing and able to buy. There's a more effective way. List it with a Realtor who already has prospects and may be able to sell it without advertising at all.

Water ban is lifted; Goodwin resigns

also allows residents to use a single sprinkler connected to a garden hose as long as it is attended by someone at all times.

"This does not mean you can turn on the sprinkler and go to the beach for the day," Goodwin said.

The commission voted to ease the restriction only after the fire department determined it had sufficient flow from all fire hydrants. As much as residents complained about the lack of pressure, they were equally unhappy about the outdoor watering restrictions.

"Generally the complaints we are getting now are from people with sprinklers at the end of a garden hose," Nelson told the board. "They say they are not getting a chance to use them. The people with automatic underground systems just need to change the timers."

The commission considered several possibilities in making the change. Removing all restrictions was rejected as was allowing residents in odd-numbered houses unrestricted use on odd days and the reverse for even-numbered houses. Compressing use into set hours was also eliminated from consideration.

"You have to keep it simple," Nelson advised.

The commission will review the procedure for dealing with violations of the water restrictions with town counsel. It may be necessary to prepare an article for the special town meeting warrant to establish a system of fines.

Goodwin's resignation was sure to shake up the agenda for the joint meeting between the commission and selectmen slated for Wednesday night after the Cohasset Mariner had gone to press. Replacing Goodwin is the joint responsibility of the commission and selectmen.

In his official letter of resignation Goodwin wrote, "Recent occurences demand that I would be spending my time as commissioner addressing political problems rather than the interest of the town or Water Department. My interest in serving the community is not based on political or personal gain but on a desire to contribute."

After almost eight years on the board, Goodwin told his fellow commissioners he determined "it would be better to just step aside. Maybe it will take the pressure off you guys. To spend the money on a special town meeting would be a waste."

A group claiming the water department has been mismanaged has been advocating for an appointed rather than an elective board. Spearheaded by Pond Street resident John McNabb, the group has been collecting petition signatures trying to force a special town meeting on the issue. McNabb is also active with the group opposed to the expansion of Cohasset Heights landfill.

Goodwin said he believed he was the real target of the group and he feared a special town meeting would only draw out people with a gripe against the water department or the commissioners.

The water commission and department has been flooded with complaints about low water pressure this summer. Residents along Cohasset's so-called Gold Coast, comprised by streets such as Jerusalem Road, Jerusalem Road Drive, Rust Way and Linden Drive, have been particularly affected.

According to acting water superintendent Steve Nelson, the town has more than enough water but was experiencing difficulties getting sufficient water pressure.

The department discovered and repaired a leak on the Border Street side of Cunningham Bridge and repaired several other minor problems.

"Each one of these things we did improved the situation," Nelson told the commissioners. "The problem was the problem would come and go. It never happened at the same time, it never happened for the same duration and it never happened to the same people."

To deal with problems and complaints, the water department has established an after-hours answering service, on-call system and a flexible scheduling system for 24-hour coverage. The department has also instituted a procedure to notify residents by newspaper and cable television announcements whenever they will be fixing leaks, flushing mains or working on the system.

Ultimately, Nelson said, the pressure problems stem from too many dead-end lines, an aging network of water mains and a rapid increase in the number of homeowners installing high demand underground lawn watering systems. Many of the mains are only four inches in diameter, rather than the standard 10 inches, and that has been further constricted by corrosion and build up along the inside of the mains.

Montouri raised the possibility of charging customers with high demand use at a higher rate.

"Anybody up in that range, let them pay for it," Montouri said. "That's what they do with power."

The water department would like to begin replacing the aged and small water mains in the system, but could find residents balking at the cost. The commissioners said the advisory board has been reluctant to consider capital improvements ever since the commission purchased land around the Lily Pond for pollution control.

The commission is slated to meet with the advisory board Tuesday, July 12 at 8:15 p.m.

The first thing on the agenda will be authorization to hire a consulting engineer to advise the commission on its plans to replace meters and upgrade the mains. The commission received bids from three engineering firms and tentatively gave the nod to low bidder Tutela Engineering Associates of Providence, R.I. Metcalf & Eddy and SEA Consultants also submitted bids.

Also up for discussion are plans to enter into a permanent management contract with a private company and setting priorities.

The commission opted to set priorities and go forward with all the business before them in spite of challenges to their authority.

"We may be forced to resign in 30 days," Koed said, leading Montouri to retort, "Then it's the problem of the next guys in here."

In other business, the commission:

- Announced an all-out campaign to read all the water meters in town. Many meters are indoors or otherwise inaccessible to water meters. The department plans to target those for priority when replacing meters.
- Discussed plans to remove the water milfoil weeds growing rampant in Lily Pond. Aquatic Control Systems will write up a proposal to remove the plants by mechanical harvesting. Herbicides are not under consideration because of the close proximity to the intake valve for the water treatment plant.

Beach picnics okay'ed

Selectmen gave the okay to the Second Congregational Church to hold a picnic on Sandy Beach from 4 to 6 p.m. on July 10 and August 14. The picnics will be confined to one end of the beach and cold food and sandwiches will be served.

"It was so skinny and had its tail up, it looked like a cat," the boy's father, Edward M. Guild Jr., recalled.

"We had already discussed rabies so Andrew ran to the back of the house and called us," he said.

Mrs. Guild, who was preparing dinner, said the raccoon apparently attracted by the smell, started scratching on the front door screen and then went into the bushes.

After calling police, Mr. Guild, who is ex-military, took matters into his own hands and shot the raccoon with a .22 caliber rifle from an upstairs window.

Although shooting a firearm within 500 feet of a dwelling is prohibited under state law, Police Sgt. Robert W. Jackson said Guild is licensed to have a firearm and that in this case, discharging the firearm is a "legitimate use."

"He was protecting life," Jackson said.

Jackson said he was sending Police Officer David Cogill, who retrieved the animal, in for a series of rabies shots as a precaution.

Animal Control Officer William Quigley said he and police responded to a call about a raccoon acting strangely near Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue the morning of the fourth.

"When we got there, the raccoon had gone into the woods," Quigley said. The next call came in at 2 p.m. about a sick-looking raccoon near Jerusalem Road and Deep Run, but again the raccoon had wandered off.

It appears that the raccoon, who turned up at the Guilds is the same animal, Quigley said.

Quigley took the raccoon, which was infested with ticks and covered with sores, to the state laboratory for testing. The results came in late Tuesday (July 5).

State health officials started tracking rabies in Massachusetts in September 1992 when a rabid raccoon was identified in the Fitchburg area. More than 1,000 raccoons since have officially tested positive for rabies across the Commonwealth. Biologists have recorded the spread since 1977 when rabies was reported in West Virginia.

"This is one of the only animal diseases of great concern to public health officials, because people can get rabies and die," Sean Fitzpatrick, a spokesman for the state Department of Public Health said.

Rabies is a viral disease that affects the central nervous system and spreads through contact with an infected animal's saliva. The virus is most commonly reported in raccoons, bats, skunks and foxes but can infect any mammal.

"The reason for the extreme concern right now is that raccoons are so abundant and that people tend to approach raccoons. You wouldn't approach a sick bat but people will approach sick or injured raccoons," said Ellie Horwitz, chief of Information and Education for the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife.

There are many more raccoons now than there were in Colonial days, in part because their natural predat[illegible] are gone as are the trapping and fur trades, Horwitz explained.

"They have adapted well to living around people," she adds.

The current epizootic is expected to decimate 85 percent of the raccoon population.

Testing priorities change once a case has been confirmed in a town, Fitzpatrick said. The state always tests as a top priority any raccoon that has come in contact with humans. Next, public health officials test raccoons that come from towns without confirmed cases and last, from towns where rabies has been identified.

Baird warned that residents know where their kids are playing and suggested walkers and joggers carry sticks. Raccoons are nocturnal animals so when one is out during the day, it can be a sign of sickness, Baird said.

"Call the police or the animal control officer if you see one acting strangely," he said.

(Staff writer Judy Enright also contributed to this report).

and maintaining a water-dependent use like a boat yard.

"His real goal is to live in this building. How he gets to that point has not been resolved," Humphreys said, adding that Hanney plans to restore the building in its historical context.

About 50 interested citizens met at the Mill River Marine Railway, 88 Border Street, for what was planned as a routine step in the state's waterfront structure licensing process.

And while the boat yard provides a valuable service to recreational boaters and adds aesthetic character to the harbor — it's the town's fishermen who see their very future at stake if the business closes.They say an on-site boat yard cannot be replaced with hydraulic trucks which would take boats out of the harbor to repair them elsewhere. Jason noted that time is critical to fishermen who must have their boats back in the water as soon as possible.

Hanney is trying to evict Mill River Marine Railway, Inc., owned and operated by Frank Carey at the site for more than 2-1/2 decades. Recently a judge found for Hanney; Carey is appealing that decision to superior court.

And while Humphreys said a boat yard business could co-exist with a residence — he refused to discuss the current boat yard eviction proceedings, other than to say the new owner wants to rent the facility at current market rates.

State waterways license rules require all structures and piers be licensed. Under the state's amnesty from Mass. General Law Chapter 91, the state's revised regulations on private waterfront structures, all existing docks, sea walls or other structures can be licensed at a minimal cost. Hanney has filed an application to license the structures on the harbor-front site, a process requiring a state environmental review.

State officials from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, Coastal Zone Management, and a representative from the consulting firm retained by Hanney to do the leg work for the licenses were on hand Friday.

Nancy Baker, state environmental analyst, said her report to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs is due tomorrow (July 8) and encouraged interested citizens to submit their comments.

Selectman Jane Goedecke asked for guidance during the permitting and licensing process.

"We're concerned that giving a permit now is opening the door to change.

"Guide us through this process to make sure we know at every stage what will happen as a result. We've seen so many times in the past something that seems benign has larger consequences."

Herbert Towle of Beechwoos Street suggested the town buy the site and allow volunteers to refurbish it like the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation did with the assistant lightkeepers residence on Government Island.

"We can get this place back in working order without it being a great grief to the town," Towle said.

Humphreys praised Towle for "stepping up to bat" and offering an alternative other than just telling someone what they can or cannot do with their land.

Annual Taverna is a terrific time for all ages

Families gathered in festive spirits this Fourth of July weekend at the Panagia Greek Orthodox Church in Cohasset for the 14th annual Grecian festival.

The festival is known as the Taverna, a Greek word meaning café. It offers a sample taste of the many Grecian sidewalk cafés in the Plaki District of Athens, which is comparable to the pure ethnic flavor of Boston's North End. Through the years, the Taverna has become one of the South Shore's major summer events. This year it is advertised for soccer enthusiasts in the World Cup directory.

The Taverna was held Friday, July 1, through Monday, July 4, in celebration of the red, white, and blue. It offered an upbeat atmosphere, projecting cultural diversity and wholesome family fun.

Adults and teenagers joined hands enthusiastically to participate in traditional Greek dances. Snapping fingers, waving arms, and rhythmic clapping of the dancers created the lively mood on the dance floor which spread throughout the audience. Children rushed to join the excitement as the pace of the music quickened.

The boutique featured many authentic hand-made Greek items, such as brightly colored wool sweaters and laminated cotton-woven belts that gave the illusion of being dipped in gold. Women crowded around the jewelry table paying particular attention to various unique designs on the multi-colored earrings.

The luscious Grecian cuisine offered appetizers, salads and pastries for those wanting snacks. The favorite pastry of the weekend was Baklava (layers of buttered filo, walnut, and honey). Galaktobouriko (custard between layers of filo and dipped in syrup) was a close second. Those with a bigger appetite could choose from the dinner and sandwich menu, which ranged from Moussaka (eggplant, ground beef, and sauce) to Dolmathes (stuffed grape leaves).

The highlight for children was the game tent. The bean bag toss and the fish pond ranked at the top of the kids' list for entertainment. Prizes for winners included sunglasses and stuffed animals.

The Taverna committee sponsored a raffle for a 1957, fire engine red, Chevy Bel Air as an added incentive to support the festival. R. O'Brien of Hingham was the lucky winner of the antique. There were also raffles for American Girl dolls Felicity, Molly, and Kirsten.

The story of the Pope family is well known among members of the Panagia Church. Almost 100 years ago Albert A. and Abby Linder Pope, who resided in Cohasset during the summer months, paid between $3,000 and $4,000 to have craftsmen construct a private chapel in memory of their son Charles, who drowned in the Strait's Pond located behind the church. The Pope family allowed other religious groups to use the church until they sold the title in 1980. With permission from the Bishop, the South Shore gained a new parish presently known as the Nativity-Assumption of The Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, with a congregation of about 150 family units.

Parishioner involvement in this community event makes for a successful celebration. The Rev. Father John Maheras, who has been the Pastor at the Panagia Church for nine years, worked with Peter Kulturides, the head chairman, and ten other chairpersons to organize the fest.

by Sallyann Chatterton

What a week for birthdays. The list begins July 3, that was my sister's (Ricki Aikau) big day. Ricki spent the weekend camping with friends, children and her grandchildren.

The fourth was Krissy Pompeo's birthday, there was a big party to honor the event.

The 8th is our daughter's celebrated event, it is a big year for her.

And, the 9th is Anita Bernstein's day to welcome another year.

What a wonderful group of ladies, hope that your every wish comes true after all the blowing out of candles. Here's to a super year.

We were reminded to remind you to be sure to drop into the South Shore Art Center if you haven't already done so, the Historical Society has an exhibit entitled "Pieces From the Past;" it is spectacular.

Included are paintings and artifacts from the past 100 years, and it is wonderful. Student packets are there for the children, made by Deer Hill School's own Mrs. Murphy. Mrs. Murphy was so happy to have Barbara Conte do sketches for the packet, something that she excels at. Every student, who was at Deer Hill when Barbara was there, will be thrilled to own it (every age will).

So, go to the Art Center, enjoy the exhibit, then be sure to thank Ms. Conte for giving her time and efforts for another great job, and Mrs. Murphy for putting it all together.

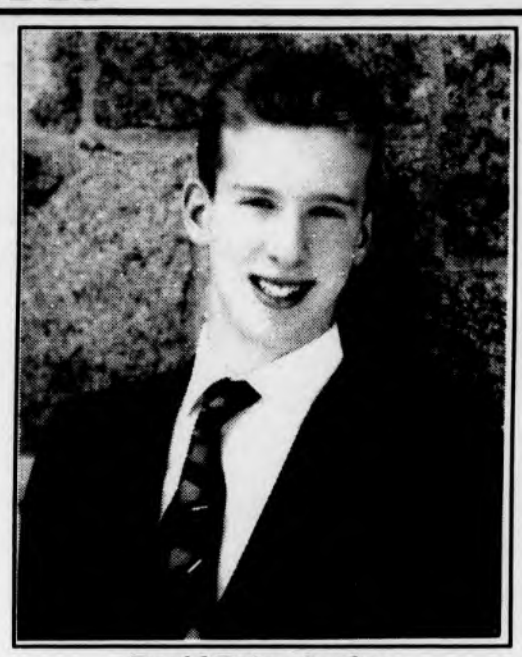
Charles Smith, son of Mrs. Debra Smith of Cohasset and Mr. Charles T. Smith of Boston, is one happy fella. He recently graduated form Avon Old Farms



David Peter Amdur

School in Avon, CT and is now looking forward to his four years at the University of VT, beginning in September. Best of luck Charles.

Boston College informs us that two "Cohassetites" graduated from there recently: Kerri D. Anglin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brian J. Anglin, majored in accounting and received her BS from the school of management. And, Karen M. Atkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Atkinson, majored in nursing and earned a BS degree from the school of Nursing.

Here's hoping your futures are everything you want them to be.

David Peter Amdur was the valedictorian of the 1994 graduating class of Thayer Academy. David, a national merit scholar, and advanced placement scholar with honors, will attend Rice University this fall.

We all were lucky during the Harborfest to watch two performances that the gymnasts performed Friday night and Sunday afternoon, under the direction of Ruthann Sargent, who runs Gymnasts in Motion at the Cohasset Community Center. It was so hot, the girls were so good, it was super.

Clive A. Muir recently graduated from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., May 20.

Mr. Muir graduated with a bachelor of science degree in computer science and another in philosophy. He was also commissioned a 2nd Lt. in the United States Air Force.

Mr. Muir's active duty assignment is in Colorado; he will be working on the USAF space satellite program. Lt. Muir was a distinguished graduate of Wilton High School's class of 1990.

He is the son of Andrew and Eileen Muir of Jerusalem Rd. in Cohasset. He is formerly of Hurlbutt St., Wilton, CT.

Marisa Verrochi received a coveted award from Thayer Academy recently, the Class of 1992 Community Spirit Award. The award is for a member of the sophomore class who has demonstrated through his or her leadership in all Thayer Academy activities both on campus and in the community and through his or her generous, positive and energetic presence, a commitment to maintaining and enhancing the spirit and sense of community at Thayer.

Marisa is the daughter of Paul a[illegible] June Verrochi. Congratulations!

News from the Winsor School, and Allison Killilea is the reason. Allison, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Killilea, received the Hockey Cup at the Winsor School graduation. She also was the proud recipient of the Tennis Cup. Allison plans to attend Middlebury College in the fall.

More news from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute; this time Todd M. Decruz of 33 Norfolk Rd. is the graduate to tell about. Todd received a BS in Civil Engineering and is the son of Rudy and Joan Decruz.

Babson College informs us that Peter M. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter W. Smith of 21 Fisher Rd., qualified for the spring semester dean's list. Keep up your good work, Peter!

Kathleen Grossman must be extremely proud; she recently received her Master's from Fairfield University. Congratulations!

This is the time of year that should be jam-packed with news from your house, why not share it with all of us. Please call me.

Hamilton/Brown

Jessica Grant Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Herbert Hamilton III of Cohasset, was married Saturday, June 25, to James Potter Brown, III, son of Mrs. Greta Brown Cummings of Little Compton, R.I., and the late James Potter Brown Jr. Tegan Rodgers Hamilton, the bride's sister, served as maid of honor, while the bridegroom's brother, Scott Pearson Brown, was best man. The Rev. Daniel Burke performed the Episcopal ceremony at the First Parish Meeting House in Cohasset. The bride wore her mother's wedding dress, an antique ivory Scalamandre silk gown by Priscilla of Boston, and a Brussels lace veil designed by Gabrielle von Henneberg of Boston.

Mrs. Brown, 27, is an account executive at Kidder, Peabody & Co., in Boston. She graduated from Wheaton College, Norton, Massachusetts. She is a member of the Vincent Club of Boston. Her father is executive vice president and an owner of Prudential Prime Properties of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Her paternal grandfather, Thomas Herbert Hamilton, Jr. was chief legal counsel for Koppers Company, Inc., Blaw-Knox Company, and White Consolidated Industries Inc. in Pittsburgh.

Jessica Grant Hamilton

The bridegroom, 36, teaches history and English at the Wheeler School in Providence, Rhode Island. He graduated from St. Paul's School, Brown University, and The Harvard Business School, and worked formerly at Drexel, Burnham, Lambert in New York. He is a member of the Tennis & Racquet Club of Boston. His father owned Glencairn Manufacturing, a textile company in Pawtucket, R.I. His stepfather, Robert Cummings, owns the brokerage firm of Brown, Lisle/Cummings in Providence. His paternal grandmother, the late Ruth Jencks McLeod, descends from Joseph Jencks who obtained what was considered the first industrial patent in America in 1646. Her husband, H. Stanford McLeod, was chancellor of Brown University from 1966 to 1970. His maternal grandfather, the late Alvin W. Pearson, was chairman of the Lehman Corporation in New York.

After a wedding trip to France, the couple will reside in Boston.

Big shoes to fill

Much has been written lately about what it takes to be an American hero. We search for people who exemplify the virtues we all too often find lacking in ourselves and those around us: courage, humility, perserverance in the face of obstacles, loyalty, tolerance of others, compassion, the readiness to do the right thing.

The country celebrated Independence Day on July 4. Two hundred and eighteen years ago the nation hardly seemed to lack for "heroes." Today, school children look back on the birth of our nation and see a dazzling display of figures who justly deserve to be called heroes — Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, James Madison, Benjamin Franklin, George Washington. Men with human flaws but heroes nonetheless.

We celebrate their gifts to us — a democratic, constitutional form of government that guarantees certain basic rights — with parades and fireworks.

It goes without saying that even as we wave the red, white and blue, we do not appreciate the heroic sacrifice it took to build a new republic in a New World using radical, untested ideas of representative government and political and social equality.

But we've made it through all these 218 years and that in itself is call for one heck of a Fourth of July celebration.

Should anyone doubt the pre-ordained significance of July 4, 1776 just consider that both Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, and New England's own John Adams, a framer of the constitution, died on the same day, July 4, 1826 within hours of each other. Their life's work was complete on the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. The new nation was safely launched.

More than 200 years later, it's only natural to wonder what Jefferson and Adams would say about the state of our nation. The two had vastly different ideas about human nature and the best way to govern.

Jefferson, a believer in the perfectibility of man and the inevitable improvement of the human condition, might have to rethink his ideas when confronted by our modern landscape — urban decay, drugs, the problem of homelessness, AIDS, the degradation of the environment and declining educational performance. Nor would he be happy with the intrusions of our government (or the media) into the personal lives of private citizens. Jefferson said the less government the better.

Adams, good Puritan that he was, believed that government existed to control man's natural tendency to follow his passions where they lead and do what is evil and self-interested. He'd look around and say "I told you so."

After 200 years the debate rages on about which view of human nature and government is correct. But one thing these two founding fathers would probably agree on is the need to rethink our ideas about what it means to be an American hero. In our hyped-up, famous-for-an-instant pop culture, too many losers are managing to masquerade as heroes.

They would probably say that as our national fabric continues to fray and our national character becomes more psychotic, we should look closer to home in ordinary places for heroes to worship.

We should start looking up to ordinary people who never make the headlines but face every day with courage and optimism about the future and have an intelligent awareness of the complexities of life.

Big shoes to fill. That's why we call them heroes.

Festival coverage was superb

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Art Center, I would like to thank you and your staff at the Cohasset Mariner for the excellent coverage given to our 39th Art Festival and Festival on the Common, 1994.

The Art Festival was successful for many reasons, including outstanding coordination and organization by this year's chair Rhonda Corey Myers, her assistant Debbie Hanian, and the Art Center staffled by Executive Director Lanci Valentine; the dedication of more than 400 volunteers, board members, and artists who donated their time and energy; businesses and organizations who provided product and financial support; and the media who promoted this wonderful event.

Each year, the Cohasset Mariner allocates a generous amount of space for press releases, photos, and articles about the Festival. As a non-profit organization, we are most grateful for all the publicity you published. The festival could not have been a success without such great coverage.

Please mark your calendar for our 40th Art Festival, for which we are planning some special celebratory events, during the Festival on the Common weekend of June 16-18, 1995! And, thank you again for all your support.

Young people to be proud of

To the Editor:

Growing up these days is seldom easy, but growing up "different" can be hardest of all.

I am thinking of a group of 16 kids, high school age, who over a four-year period have attended early morning seminary from 6 to 7 a.m. five days a week throughout the school year. The standards and course of study as set by the LDS Church Educational System, nationwide, consists of: Old Testament, New Testament, Book of Mormon, and Mormon Church History.

Mrs. Betty Thurston of Hingham and Mrs. Connie Mormann of Marshfield, teachers of this local seminary program, can attest to the discipline needed by these young people and their teachers. These are outstanding students, hey say. They hold leadership "callings" in the local LDS church on Gardner St., Hingham, as well as maintaining Honor Roll status in their various high schools as well as performing community service projects.

Like adult members of their faith they choose to obey the Word of Wisdom, a Mormon health code precluding the use of tobacco, alcohol, drugs, and even tea or coffee. They are setting an incredible example to their peers of young people who choose not to smoke, or drink, and who show respect to their elders and to their teachers, Mrs. Thurston exclaimed.

In the local program there were eight who graduated from four years of seminary, and all will be going on to college.

"I think this speaks something about the caliber of the kids," Mrs. Thurston said.

Hats off to: Adam Mangum and Mark Thurston of Hingham; Gabe Hartnett of Weymouth & Hingham High; Jaime Mormann of Marshfield and Duxbury High; Melca Ruano of Quincy and Ashley Heilner of Cohasset (all accepted at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah); and Sean Howe of Pembroke and Shelly Arkell of Hingham, accepted at Utah Valley State College, Orem, Utah.

Young people, we're proud of you!

Community Lights

Here is a list of some volunteer opportunities for Cohasset citizens:

• Want to get involved in town affairs? Selectmen are looking for volunteers to serve as associate members of the conservation commission, on the mosquito control committee, and on the computer study committee. Call 383-9900 for more information.

• The Council on Aging seeks volunteers to drive the Senior Shuttle. The shuttle takes seniors to run local errands, to medical appointments, Sunday church services, and once a month to South Shore Plaza and Hanover Mall. Volunteers are asked to drive once a month. This is a great way to meet seniors, to help them, and to get involved. Call 383-9112 for more information.

The COA is also in need of kitchen help for its Tuesday and Thursday lunch programs. Volunteers serve food and drinks and help with set up and clean up. The lunches are fun, informal and ...good! Call 383-9112 if interested.

If you would like to water water and weed the new community garden at Wheelwright Park, North Main Street, this is your chance. The fruits and vegetables from the garden will be given to the lunch program, the food pantry and the volunteers, call 383-9112 if you have a green thumb or want to develop one!

• The Cohasset food Pantry needs additional volunteers to handle collection and distribution of food. The pantry, which is supported by local churches and social services is located in the rear of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Ave. next to Town Hall.

Anyone wishing to learn more about volunteering at the Pantry, may call Annette Sawchuck at 383-0050.

• South Shore Health & Educational Foundation (SSH&EF) at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth has many exciting volunteer opportunities to assist with fund-raising events, community leadership committees, research and data entry, mailing, and daily office support. Please call the Foundation office at (617)340-8856 and ask for Kelly.

• Volunteering in the communications department at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth may be right for you. Call Karen Berry, communications assistant, at (617)340-8302 if you can provide assistance.

• The South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society needs volunteer drivers to take South Shore cancer patients to hospitals for treatment. This agency operates a free transportation service out of a 'hot-line' headquarters in the Hersey House, Hingham and serves patients in Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull among other South Shore towns. Call 749-2535 or 341-4210.

Volunteers are asked to pledge only one trip per month scheduled at their convenience and are covered by blanket insurance and may be reimbursed on a mileage basis if necessary.

• The Social Service League's Friends' program matches volunteers for one-on-one visits with people in the community who may be physically limited, lonely, or isolated. Call 383-0771 or 383-0821.

• Compassionate human services professionals and other caring special persons needed to volunteer as facilitators for self-help parents' groups in the Weymouth area. These groups provide support for parents under stress who want to improve their relationships with their children. One evening a week commitment. Training and support provided. Call 337-7916 or 1-800-882-1250.

• Volunteers are needed at the community center (contact Stephanie Church, 383-0088); Meals on Wheels, (contact the Social Service League, 383-0771), Cohasset Consignment Shop (Andy Merrill, 383-0687), Council on Aging (383-9112), and Senior Shuttle bus drivers (383-9112).

(Please send your volunteer opportunities to Community Lights, the Cohasset Mariner, PO Box 71, Cohasset 02025).

Several Cohasset residents were honored recently at the South Shore Hospital's eighth annual volunteer recognition luncheon for "caring enough to be the best." Among the 300 hospital volunteers praised by David T. Hannan, president and chief executive officer of South Shore Hospital, for their compassion toward patients as well as their spirit of volunteerism were (from row from left): Dorothea Roberts, Tilly Nardo, and Mildred Woomer; (back row form left): Eileen Tyeryar, Lydia Hill, Martha Douglas, Mary Keating, Alicia Seavey, and Virginia Anderson. South Shore Hospital volunteers welcome patients, greet visitors, answer phones, and contribute more than 100,000 hours of service to the hospital each year. For information on becoming a South Shore Hospital volunteer, call (671) 340-8242.

Town resource planned for boat house

(Editor's note: the following letter from Jack Buckley, who plans to start the Cohasset Maritime Institute to be based at the Hagerty-site boat house, was sent to selectmen)

Dear selectmen:

I just wanted to write a brief not thanking you for your support of our boat house proposal. Given the enthusiastic volunteer turn-out on Sunday, June 27, when we stripped and cleaned out the interior (as well as closed in the large opening in the west side) I am confident that the boat house can be restored primarily by volunteer student and adult labor. Those who participated on Sunday (about 15 adults and one student) truly enjoyed themselves.

While, I have your attention, I would also like to reiterate that my goal in restoring the boat house is the development of a school-community resource which honors the lifeboat history of Cohasset and perpetuates the legacy of traditional wooden boat rowing. In addition to the important maritime history, craftsmanship, and aesthetics associated with traditional wooden boats, rowing is also a unique social and physical activity which take place in a very beautiful setting. Rowing is simultaneously individual and collective, offering people the opportunity to reflect inwardly and the opportunity to be part of a crew. It becomes the workout toward which people look forward as well as the social activity we all seek in our own way. I write this not to make rowing out to be more than it is, but to provide insight as to one other dimension of this community resource that the boat house can be.

Again, thank you for your support to date. Please let me know if there is any information you may need. And feel free to join us on a Sunday morning if you're curious about rowing.

Seaside Cafe a hit

To the Editor:

Our Seaside Cafe held in conjunction with the Festival on the Common was a great success. This was our first venture into the restaurant business. We learned a lot of short cuts for next year.

Our air-conditioned Senior Center was a wonderful draw on such a hot weekend. Many special thanks to my committee, Margaret Bates and Helen Murphy. We also want to thank all the volunteers who worked with us and all you wonderful people who cooked and donated all the food.

We made $436.50 for the Friends of the CoA. The arts and crafts made $48 and the Cohasset Savings Bank gave us $100 for start up money.

Next year will be bigger and better!

Chairman

Movable ramp available

The Cohasset Commission on Disabilities has donated a movable ramp to the town. It is stored at the fire station for use by any resident. Inquiries about the ramp can be directed to the commission at the town hall or the fire department.

For information call Michele Buckley at 383-0304.

Community input sought on town permit distribution

Town departments are considering a new approach to the distribution of parking permits (Sandy Beach, etc.), transfer station permits, dog licenses, and mooring stickers. The proposals calls for establishing a uniform time period from mid-May to mid-June whereby residents could pick up these permits at one location in town hall.

The purchase of dog licenses by mail, and the payment of mooring permit fees by mail will be continued.

Bowles, Bryan lead locals in Hingham road race

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Robert Bowles and Katherine Bryan were Cohasset's top male and female finishers in Hingham's Fourth of July Road Race on Monday to lead all Cohasset finishers in the prestigious 4.6-mile race.

Kingston's George Rose won for the second year in a row, and third overall, in 23:27, besting 1983 Boston Marathon winner Greg Meyer by 30 seconds as 910 runners were listed as official finishers.

Bowles, 20, finished 92nd in 30-minutes flat, while Bryan was 528th in 39:06.

Other top finishers from Cohasset included Joe Warren (97th, 30:12), D.A. Standberg (175th, 31:47), Michael Savage (273rd, 33:40) and Peter Wood (323rd, 34:15). Trailing Bryan were Patricia Leahy (544th, 39:28) and Mary Cowan (809th, 44:20).

Rose, a perennial winner on the South Shore, was hardly taking Meyer lightly.

"Greg Meyer is somewhat retired now but you never know what he can pull," said Rose. "His 40 to 50 miles a week is enough to blow anyone away," he said.

The last Rose saw of Meyer was just past the mile mark, when the lead pack of Rose, Meyer, and eventual fourth-place finisher and top master, Guy Barra (24:35), went through in a conservative 5:04.

Rose consciously wanted to run the first mile with the pack to get a feel as to how the race would develop. Given the downhill layout of the course and the slow first mile, Rose, who has run the initial mile in as fast as 4:29 in past races, had plenty bounce in his legs. When Meyer or Barra appeared content with the pace, Rose picked up the pace and took the lead for good.

"I just wanted to be competitive so I went out," he said of the first mile

Rose "ran steady" through the 4-mile mark (20:20), stringing together remarkably consistent miles of 5:06, 5:05 and 5:05 to lengthen his lead over Meyer along the scenic, Main Street route.

"I was pretty even all the way through,"

It was a hot and muggy July 4th when I caught a case of World Cup fever.

There were a million things I could have done Monday afternoon but I stayed in and watched the U.S.A. square off with Brazil in football action instead. (I know we call it soccer in this country. But when you catch World Cup Fever, you have to talk the talk.)

The game was an exciting contest where the Americans fell just short of pulling off an upset on par with David and Goliath.

I watched the whole thing and didn't channel surf once.

The following are signs that you may have also caught World Cup Fever and don't really know it.

One- Do you run around the house handing out yellow and red cards to people who bug you?

(I handed out a yellow card to my roommate because he did not throw out an empty potato chip bag.)

Two- Do you try to do everything with your feet?

(There were a few things I could do but brushing my teeth was a bit much.)

Three- Do you have the urge to use banned substances?

(Argentina's Maradona was caught using high powered cold medicine. Monday I ran to the store and bought all the Vick's Vapor Rub in stock.)

Four- When you do something cool do you yell, "GOAAALLLLL!" for 20 minutes like that TV announcer?

(Monday night I did some laundry and when the spin cycle kicked in, I lost it.)

Five- Do you wear weird shirt-shorts color combinations?

(Today I'm wearing orange shorts and a purple polka-dotted shirt that needs batteries.)

Six- Do you have the urge to go by one name?

(The guy who scored the game winning goal for Brazil is known only as "Bebeto." From now on, my name is "Dabo." I will not answer to anything else.)

Seven- Are you considering growing a pony tail?

(American goalie Tony Meola has a look right out of "Scarface". My hair will not see any scissors until I look as cool.)

Eight- Do you want to be part of a riot?

(Right now I want to run down some crowded street in Boston and throw rocks.)

Nine- Do you feel like shooting people who let you down?

(A Columbian player was shot six times for accidently kicking a goal into his own net in the game against America. As for me, I'm going to find the right fielder who dropped the fly ball that cost us a little league victory way back in the 70s. Your days are numbered Rich.)

Ten- Do you want to have thigh muscles that could crack walnuts?

(I have begun a serious program to pump up my leg muscles. Every morning I run ten miles while dribbling a football. Then at night I do jumping jacks until I get dizzy. So far, so good.

within two years.

O'Connell, who was coach and GM of the Bruins top minor league club, the Providence Bruins, for the last two years, is looking forward to the challenge.

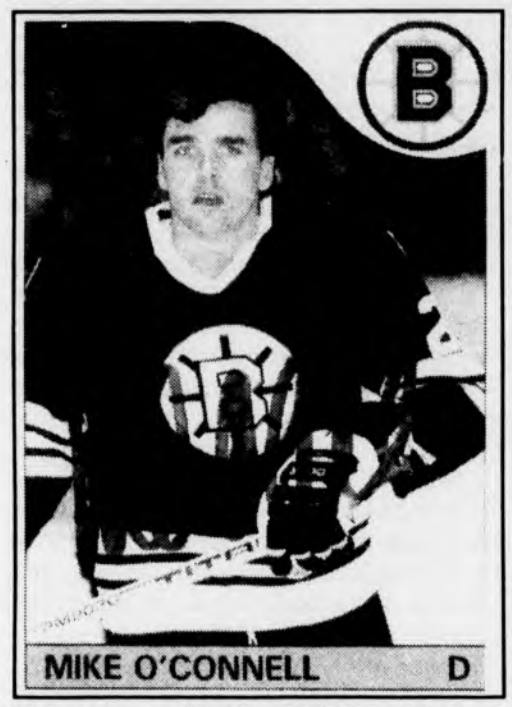
"It was a position I always wanted to reach," he said from his home Tuesday afternoon. "And I'm very excited about the opportunity given to me by the Bruins. My short-term goal is to get acquainted with the job at hand. That will mean talking to other GM's, players, former teammates and working with Harry. My long-term goals are to keep the program successful and win the championship."

O'Connell was known as an intelligent, confident and hard-working player during his NHL career which began in '77-'78 with the Blackhawks and ended with the Red Wings in the late 80s.

He will continue to use those qualities in his front office position with the Bruins.

"The two most important qualities for a hockey player are courage and a belief in yourself," he said. "I don't know if those can be taught or not but they were important to my success as a player and I will continue to use them in this position."

O'Connell grew up in Cohasset and played youth hockey all over the South Shore as a boy.



Cohasset resident and former Boston Bruin Mike O'Connell was named the Bruins' assistant general manager on Monday. The photograph above is one of O'Connell's autographed hockey cards.

He comes from an athletic background as his father, Tom, played football in the NFL.

O'Connell attended Archbishop Williams High School and was part of the class of '74.

However, before his senior year, he began his quest to make the NHL.

He stopped playing at the high school level and played semi-pro hockey for the Braintree Hawks.

He then moved on to the Ontario Hockey League, the top Junior A league in Canada.

He was eventually drafted by the Chicago Blackhawks and played in his first NHL game at the age of 21.

Hoby Taylor, 39, who grew up in Scituate and is the current president of the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham, played youth hockey with O'Connell as Cohasset did not have a youth program.

The two eventually became rivals in high school as Taylor played for Thayer Academy while O'Connell was at Archbishop Williams.

Over the last few years, O'Connell and Taylor have worked together in youth hockey programs and at hockey camps.

"This is a very good move for the Bruins," Taylor said. "Michael knows the game. He will show up to work on time and he has a commitment to giving his best effort."

Taylor could tell early on that O'Connell was a special player.

"He was a great athlete right from the start," he said. "He was also good in football and baseball. As for his hockey skills, he was very smart and played conservative, stay-at-home defense. I never saw him have a bad game."

However, Taylor said O'Connell also has the ability to coach and lead a team from the front office.

"He is a good teacher of the game," he said. "A lot of former players get into coaching and while they were good players, they often cannot relate as coaches. Mike doesn't have that problem. He is a nice guy and very articulate. He will get his point across."

Bob Ferriter, 39, who is originally from Hull, also played youth hockey with O'Connell.

Ferriter, who now lives in Scituate, went on to be an All-American at Boston College.

He said O'Connell and the Bruins are a good fit.

"Mike is from this area and he knows what Bruins hockey means to people," Ferriter said. "He is a good guy and I think he will do a terrific job."

Ferriter said O'Connell's intelligence will be his strongest asset.

"Mike wasn't the biggest guy around but he was quick and very intelligent," he said. "He knows the game and he won't let anyone down."

Adult evening tennis lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept ongoing telephone registrations for adult evening tennis classes for all levels of instruction, by calling 383-6791.

Classes will be scheduled as follows: beginners, 6 to 7 p.m., Mondays; intermediates, 7 to 8 p.m., Mondays; advanced, 6 to 7 p.m., Wednesdays; beginners, 7 to 8 p.m., Wednesdays. Other classes will be scheduled as demand indicates.

All sessions are four weeks in duration and cost $35 per person, per session. Teaching will be Bill Stebbins of Cohasset Recreation Department's tennis staff. Participants who do not own or have access to a racquet should indicate this at the time of registration. Non-residents will be accepted on a space available basis. Another evening will be made available should demand indicate.

Camp accepting registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting registrations for a boys and girls basketball camp to be held the week of Monday, July 11, in the Cohasset High School gym.

Ron Ford, boys varsity basketball head coach, and his staff will conduct the week-long camp, which is for youngsters age 9 and over. The tuition for basketball camp is $125 per child and camp hours are from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. daily, Monday through Friday, July 11-15.

Registration forms are available at the recreation department office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Non-residents will be accepted for basketball camp on a space available basis.

Junior Skippers skate to tie

By Kevin Lewis
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Junior Skippers skated to a 3-3 tie with the Milton Warriors Saturday, July 3. The "never say die" Junior Skippers rallied to tie the game on three occasions.

The game featured outstanding goal tending by Josh Ethier. He was supported on defense by Ryan Kimball, Jay Rasmussen, Will Moody, Jake Morgan and Tim Straughan.

The offense was provided by Greg O'Connell with two goals and Brian Lewis with one goal. Eric Libby and Greg Figeredo each had two assists. Chris Caron and Danny Williams also had assists. Will Prendegast, Chris Carr and Pete Whoriskey all played well as forwards.

Soccer registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP Soccer camp, for children ages 4 through 7 years of age.

VIP Soccer Camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4 through 7. ABC Soccer is especially designed for 4- and 5-year-olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 18-22. The cost is $40 for the week.

Also offered by VIP is a three-hour per day program, meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 18-22 for 6- and 7-year-olds. The cost is $70 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the Front Field of Cohasset High School.

Rose said. "That's the best way to run. I wanted to enjoy it (the finish). I'm usually involved in a sprint."

Meyer, wearing a singlet of his Alma Mater, The University of Michigan, appeared fresh and in shape as he crossed the finish line to a tremendous roar from the packed crowd that gathered in Hingham Square. Nearing the finish, Meyer briefly veered to the right and shook hands with one fan who emerged from the spectators.

Weymouth's Bill Parsley, running in his first road race in more than 10 years, passed Barra to hold down third place (24:08). Ken Mercier of Marlboro trailed Barra by three seconds in fifth (24:38).

Next to Meyer, Gary Polonski was the next Hingham finisher, breaking into the top 10 in ninth place (25:26).

Rose, who beat Ed Sheehan in the final half mile of last year's race, won his second consecutive Hilltopper 10K in June after registering a 2:27 at April's Boston Marathon.

He plans to run in the Newburyport 10-miler on August 2, before tackling another marathon this fall. Rose is still deciding whether or not to run Minnesota's Twin Cities or the Columbus Marathon in Ohio. His goal is to qualify for the 1996 Olympic Trials in the event.

"If I have the speed workouts and distance behind me I'll try for a 2:22 (the time needed to qualify)," Rose said.

On the women's side, Molly Dunlap's fifth-place finish (28:59) made her Hingham's queen of distance running, at least for one day, as she led all the hometown females across the line.

Katie Meehan missed cracking the top 20 by one place, but the Weymouth native's 26:34 was good enough to take first place in the female division in front of Ronalda Blanchard and Weymouth residents Kristen Belmarsh (27:32) and Dina Conlin (27:56). Meehan, Belmarsh and Conlin are all former Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic cross-country runners.

The unsung heroes of Monday's Fourth of July road race in Hingham were undoubtedly the group of high-school age recreation instructors who had the thankless job hustling the runners through the finish-line chute at the end of the 4.6 mile jaunt down Main Street as they poured across. Road races, particularly those the size of Hingham's, can never have enough volunteers and it's added plus when they're as efficient and courteous as the 20-plus donned in the bright white T-shirts.

For those runners who weren't able to find out their final overall place on the day of the race, T.C.B.Y. will have the official results posted in its window for the next two weeks. The store is located just beyond the race's finish line.

Facts about golf course pesticides

1. Why do golf courses use pesticides?

Pesticides help to limit the damage that can be caused by insects, weeds and plant diseases. Insecticides, herbicides and fungicides are used very selectively to protect the health of turf, trees and other living things on the course. Fertilizers provide much-needed nutrition far the course's plant life.

It is very important to note that the pesticides and fertilizers are not used primarily for aesthetic reasons. First and foremost, they are tools that help ensure a healthy playing surface for the game. Furthermore, they help to protect a valuable and ecologically important piece of land. Golf courses are tremendous economic assets as well as vital greenspaces for communities. They employ hundreds of thousands of people, enhance local economies through tax revenues and tourism and provide many ecological benefits. For example, golf courses help to filter air pollutants and create fresh oxygen, they are excellent groundwater recharge sites and, most importantly, they are critical wildlife sanctuaries in urban and suburban areas.

2. How does a superintendent decide when to apply a pesticide?

Pest problems on golf courses are often relatively predictable or can be diagnosed as part of an ongoing monitoring program. Once the problem has been identified, the superintendent considers the available options. These could include cultural practices (such as physically removing weeds, changing irrigation patterns or clearing underbrush around a problem area to allow more air movement) or the use of biological controls or chemical products. Once the problem is diagnosed and the right treatment has been selected, the superintendent waits for the ideal time to treat the problem in the most effective and environmentally sound manner available. This approach is often called "integrated pest management."

3. What kinds of products are used?

Most people are surprised to find that the majority of the pesticide products used by superintendents are identical or closely related to those used by homeowners.

4. How do we know that these products aren't harmful to humans or wildlife?

Pesticide production is one of the most highly regulated industries in the United States. Before a product is registered by the EPA, it must be rigorously tested for potential human health and environmental effects. This process can take up to ten years and involve more than 120 different tests and studies. Today, manufacturers often invest up to $50 million in product safety and testing before a new pesticide ever comes to the market.

5. Are golfers at risk?

No. There is no scientific evidence that golfers face any chronic health risks from the pesticides used to maintain courses. Once a liquid product is applied and the turfgrass is dry or the product has been watered in, there is very little chance of exposure to golfers or others who enter the area. It is worth noting that a small percentage of people may be allergic to a particular product, just as some people are allergic to household cleaners, soaps or perfumes. Golfers with possible chemical allergies are always encouraged to contact superintendents to find out what products might be in use.

6. If the products aren't that dangerous, why do professional applicators wear protective gear?

Applicators work directly with pesticides and are exposed much more often than golfers. Consider the fact that it is safe for a person to have an occasional x-ray, but the technician may actually leave the room to prevent repeated exposure. Pesticide label directions (which carry the weight of law) require that applicators take certain precautions based on the assumption that the same person will be repeatedly exposed to the same product over many years. These precautions may include the use of rubber gloves, goggles, respirators or protective clothing.

7. Some media stories suggest that pesticides are linked to cancer. What are the facts?

Most of the product testing required by EPA focuses on this question. Before a product is registered, tests are done (usually on laboratory rats) using exposure rates that are considerably higher than any exposure a golfer could ever receive. Although a recent study commissioned by GCSAA to examine causes of death among its members found some higher rates of certain cancers, researchers said that no cause-and-effect relationship could be established from the data. They also said that lifestyle choices (smoking, diet, stress, etc.) were the most significant factor in the results.

8. Do properly applied chemicals pose a threat to groundwater, lakes or streams?

No. Studies consistently show that a well-managed golf course can actually improve water quality on and around the facility. Research also shows that when pesticides and fertilizers are used properly, they do not tend to seep into groundwater or run off into surface water. Modern products and practices allow superintendents to manage turfgrass so efficiently that there is little chance of harm to our precious water resources.

9. What kinds of training and education do superintendents and golf course applicators have?

Golfers are often surprised to find that most superintendents have college degrees in agronomy, horticulture or a related field. Because it's important to keep up-to-date with new information and technologies, the majority also attend continuing education programs offered by universities and associations like GCSAA. Superintendents are widely considered to be among the best-educated and most judicious users of pesticide products. The vast majority of superintendents are using integrated pest management practices to ensure that both the turf and the environment stay healthy. Applicators are also trained and licensed by the state. A recent study indicated that nearly 100 percent of GCSAA-member courses had at least one licensed applicator on staff (despite the fact that it isn't necessarily required in some states). This confirms a high degree of compliance and concern about safe and proper usage of chemical tools.

DeLuise show cancelled

Due to a conflict, the Dom DeLuise Show scheduled for July 29 at The South Shore Music Circus has been cancelled. Anyone with tickets to this show may return them for a refund or exchange them for another show, including Rob Bartlett, Jackie Mason, Bill Cosby, Bob Newhart and Paula Poundstone.

Tickets may be exchanged by mail or by going to the Music Circus box office. The Music Circus must have the tickets in order to process an exchange. Anyone who purchased tickets through Ticketmaster must return them to Ticketmaster.

If a ticket holder does not want to make an exchange they may be returned to the place of purchase or through the mail for a refund. Phone sales may be returned by mail.

For more information call the Music Circus at 383-9850.

Courses for young adults in grades 7 through 12 include Colored Pencil, Drawing and Painting for Grades 9 through 12, Cartooning and Sculpture Studio.

Young artists in grades 1 through 3 are offered Art and Music, Papier Maché Creatures, Castles, Knights, Kings and Queens; Watercolor Painting, Be A Puppeteer, Handbuilding and Wheel for Kids and Cartooning.

Adult courses include Beginning Drawing, Beginning Painting, Colored Pencil, Clay for Adults, Introduction to Monprint/Monotype, Intermediate Monoprint/ Collagraph/Intaglio and Outdoor Watercolor.

For information call the center at 383-2787.

Sign up at rec department

The recreation department is holding signups for the summer drama workshop's production of "The Little Mermaid."

Rehearsals will be from 1 to 3 p.m. three or four days a week at the Deer Hill School beginning Wednesday July 6. The program is in conjunction with the playground program but is open to any interested child. The fee for the session is $68 per child. Registrations will be accepted over the phone at 383-6791 or in person at the recreation office in town hall.

Registration for "Aladdin," the second in a series of seven children's performances at the Music Circus will be from 9 a.m. to noon Thursday July 14 at the town hall. Registrations are open to children enrolled in the summer playground program and tickets are $5 per child.

Music Circus registrations will be held each Thursday through August 4. Registration will be held two weeks before the performance.

Cohasset carillon concert

Sally Slade Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, will be the featured artist for the third in the current series of 10 summer carillon recitals on the Cohasset Carillon at 6 p.m. Sunday, July 10. Her varied program will feature original works for carillon, as well as transcriptions of music for other instruments and arrangements of hymns, folk music, and popular music.

Warner is also carillonneur at Phillips Academy in Andover, and record librarian in the school's music department. She has recently returned from the annual Congress of the Guild of Carillonneurs in North America, held this year at Brigham Young University. In 1996, the GCNA Congress will be held in Cohasset.

The 57-bell Taylor carillon in St. Stephen's tower is the largest (by number of bells) in New England, and has been acclaimed as one of the finest in the world. The Cohasset Summer Recital Series, now in its 70th year, is the oldest continuing annual carillon series in North America.

Printed programs will be available at the recital, both on Cohasset Common and in the courtyard behind the church on Highland Ave. The concert will be given rain or shine, and there is no charge. Bring lawn chairs and blankets, and enjoy a picnic supper at any of the prime listening places mentioned on the back of the program. Following the recital, those who wish to do so may take a tour of the tower and sign the visitors' book in the playing cabin.

For additional information, call the church at 617/383-1083, or Sally Slade Warner at 508/475-2599.

New CDROM service

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Cohasset, has two new CDROM services ready for public use. The products are SIRS RESEARCHER and SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER.

The computer workstation and the two CDROM services are on loan for the summer from the Cohasset High School.

Each CDROM can hold nearly 190,000 pages of text.

SIRS (Social Issues Resources Series) RESEARCHER provides full text of thousands of articles selected from over 800 sources from 1988 to the present. These articles relate to the sciences, social issues, global events, historic, economic and political information.

SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER gives full text of selected articles from publications of federal government departments, agencies and commissions. It also includes a congressional directory, with information on U.S. Senate and House members and their staffs.

Both files are searchable by key word, or by subject category, or by names of persons or agencies. Summaries of articles or the articles may be read on screen or printed.

Meters, study to flush out water mess

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Town officials took a first step towards washing away Cohasset's water problems by authorizing an engineering study of the water system and vowing to have 500 water meters replaced by the end of summer.

At a joint meeting with the advisory committee Tuesday night, Tutela Engineering Associates of Wilmington was hired at a cost of $19,000 to complete a four-week hydro-static model of the water system and update the 1980 SEA Consultants report on the town's water plant.

The advisory committee authorized the release of $15,000 from the FY95

Suspect raccoons referred to police

The specter of rabies prompted selectmen to transfer jurisdiction over the dog officer's position to the police chief.

Selectmen say calls about suspicious animals should go directly to the police department at 383-1212 rather than to the animal control officer's answering machine at town hall.

While Animal Control Officer William Quigley checks his calls — having citizens call the police who can contact him immediately is more prudent in light of the recent public health crisis, selectmen said.

Cohasset had its first confirmed case of rabies last week when a rabid raccoon turned up on a resident's doorstep. The same animal had eluded police and the

Cohasset's clock is in good hands

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

The fact that Cohasset's town clock is located in the tower of the First Parish Church might suggest a breach of the separation of church and state to some people. According to Noel Ripley, Cohasset's official keeper of the clock, though, that's just the way things were done in the 1860s.

"It was fairly common," said Ripley, who operates a clock-repair service out of his home on South Main Street. "There are four town clocks in Hingham, for example, and three of them are in church towers. People had to put them some place, after all."

Ripley and the clock know each other well. This summer, as he is required to do every 15 years, Ripley will make whatever repairs are necessary to keep the proud old instrument running

People wanted to take the plunge

Does a little hard work and no pay appeal to you? If so, you may just be one of the citizens selectmen are looking for.

They are actively soliciting volunteers who would like to get involved in town government by serving on an appointed board.

Five citizens are needed for the E-911 committee to set the stage for Enhanced 911 which should be in place in Cohasset within a year. The committee will specifically look at how best to handle the dispatch duties with the new emergency telephone system and could look at regionalizing that service with other towns.

The town is in dire need of a new cemetery. There is an opening on the cemetery committee for an enthusiastic individual who help find a solution to the problem. Right now there's a possibility of expanding an old cemetery and/or creating a new one.

If mosquitos are the bane of your summer existence, how about joining the mosquito control board? This group has lots of creative ideas about how to

Cohasset's week

Seminar for alcohol servers

The Cohasset Police Department and the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau are sponsoring a tri-town — Cohasset, Scituate, Hull — seminar on alcohol server awareness from 9 a.m. to noon Thursday July 14 at the Chart House Restaurant in Cohasset. All alcohol license holders from the three towns have been invited to attend.

The seminar is designed to be a forum for bar, restaurant and package store owners and managers to hear first hand about the issues confronting their industry. The focus will be on the liability issues they face when serving alcohol and how they can have a positive impact on the status of drunk driving and underage drinking.

Statewide, alcohol is a factor in about one half of all fatal accidents. The Cohasset Police Department and the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau believe prevention is better than prosecution. They recognize the importance of server training and liability education as an effective way to reduce the number of impaired drivers on the road.

Speakers at the seminar will include Ronald S. Beitman, Esq., a nationally recognized authority on drunk driving litigation; Mike Marcantonio, Master Trainer "TIPS" Program: Pam Nourse, ABCC Commissioner; and Regina Thomas, Educational Liaison for the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

Governor's Highway Safety Bureau Director Nancy J. Luther has said, "This type of event can have a real impact on alcohol serving and sale practices in the area. The fact that the response from the license holders has been so good is encouraging."

Police are investigating a recent incident of vandalism at the Osgood School where vandals through rocks through panes of glass in the third-grade classroom area the night of July 4th. According to Supt. Stephen Hart, police are going to check the area on a regular basis. The incident, and others have disturbed at least one parent of a child at the summer playground program. See page 10 for a letter to the editor. (Staff photo/Alan Chapman)

Drug, alcohol committee

The Drug and Alcohol Committee held its annual reorganizational meeting last month.

Officers for the coming year are James Ted Carroll Jr., Chairman; Dianne Erlandson-Perkinson, Vice-Chairman; Clark Chatterton, Treasurer; and Mary P. Mack, Secretary.

Members are Eleanor M. Wall, Keith F. Knowles, Linda J. McCarthy, William D. McAuliffe, Craig D. Muir and Police Representative Jeffrey R. Treanor.

New regs dock pier owners

By Roger Snow
Mariner correspondent

Judgment Day may be looming for waterfront property own[illegible]on the South Shore — and it's less than 18 months [illegible]y.

If you have a house or a business sitting on a shoreline, any shoreline — ocean, great pond or stream — you might want to write down the date Oct. 4, 1995. That's when amnesty from Massachusetts General Law Chapter 91, the state's revised regulations on private waterfront structures, is scheduled to expire.

Under the amnesty provision, all existing docks, sea walls or other structures can be licensed at a minimal cost. But when amnesty ends, unlicensed waterfront structures are subject to heavy fines, or in extreme cases, dismantlement — all in the name of public interest.

Chapter 91 wields that type of power.

"I don't think a lot of people on the South Shore have even heard of Chapter 91," says Gene J. Guimond, an attorney with Haufler Associates in Norwell. "Or, they've heard about it but don't understand the ramifications — especially to the value of their property.

"There are probably a lot of people who don't know that after 1995, the state can walk in and say, "Comply, or rip it down."

A four-year outreach program from the state Department of Environmental Protection, which included direct mailings to 140,000 boat owners and a telephone hotline, has tried to put the word on the street about Chapter 91. And people are listening. The D.E.P.'s Waterways Regulation Program has fielded more than 2,000 licensing applications during the last year.

So, if you own waterfront property and are still in the dark over Chapter 91, what's your first move?

"The first thing people should do is contact someone who is familiar with all the rules and regulations — and exceptions — of Chapter 91," says Guimond, who is Haufler's point man in such cases. "Just from talking to someone, people might find out they're not even affected by this."

Robert J. Alvarez is a former D.E.P. agent who now advises in questions of coastal and inland waterways and wetlands. Alvarez says misinformation is causing some people to panic and act hastily.

"I suspect that probably five percent of all the people that are applying for permits right now don't have to be," he said. "They just don't have the proper people representing them that know enough to see if they've already got licenses or know if (the state's) jurisdiction has been properly determined.

"There are some honest-to-god exemptions from Chapter 91 that people who claim to be experts don't even know about."

Property owners can take their concerns straight to the source — the D.E.P.'s Waterways Regulation Program in Boston. Over the last four years, the D.E.P. has received nearly 10,000 such inquiries.

According to both Guimond and Alvarez, if you have an unlicensed structure that is under Chapter 91 jurisdiction you're better off filing your permit application now than waiting for the amnesty deadline to pass.

"The sooner they get it the better," says Alvarez. "It's like filing your taxes with the I.R.S. Those who wait until the end of '95, it may take them two or three years to get their licenses, because (the D.E.P.) will be so overloaded at that point. Right now, it's taking a year to process the applications. But that's going to increase when the amnesty deadline approaches."

Guimond figures the benefits of filing under amnesty in simple terms — money. According to his figures, if you have a 100-by-six-foot long pier and two twenty-by-eight-foot floats, under M.G.L. Chapter 91 your permitting fee would be a minimum of $3,100 for a 30-year license. The same structure under the amnesty program would cost a maximum of $1,900 for a 99-year license. Big difference.

And a big incentive, too, "That's part of the reason they granted this amnesty program back in 1990," says Guimond. "It's to your benefit to file before Oct. 4 (1995)."

Chapter 91 does not just affect property owners on the ocean. If you live on a great pond (one that covers more than 10 acres in its natural state) or a stream or river with a water flow greater than 10-feet per second, you may be subject to the D.E.P.'s new regulations.

So, it's not just coastal towns like Scituate, Marshfield and Cohasset that can expect to feel Chapter 91's wrath. Landlocked communities such as Pembroke, with its great ponds and Hanover, with the North River, should also investigate options under the amnesty provision.

Of course, there are some people who are fully aware of Chapter 91 and its long-reaching authority, but figure the state won't come in and order them to register or pay fines. Guimond and Alvarez don't advise calling the D.E.P.'s bluff.

"The new law requires $25,000 per day fines for violators," says Guimond in an open letter to South Shore waterfront property owners. "We guarantee (the D.E.P.) will levy these fines after the amnesty program ends."

Adds Alvarez: "They had already started levying fines just before the new regulations went into effect. But they were forced to stand down for the amnesty period to allow people to come in.

"They're going to be very aggressive about this. That's what they're telling everyone."

Water repair timetable talked about at joint meeting

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

Bob Belliveau has no doubts that water is a hot issue in Cohasset. The Continental Cablevision community television director got more than 20 calls requesting him to televise the selectmen and water commissioners joint meeting last Wednesday.

When Belliveau showed up with his camera in town hall, it surprised Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan who thought the meeting would be nothing more than an informal working session.

Sullivan went on to say "It seems to me we are out of the crisis mood; everybody has pressure. I wonder if we need to change anything?"

That raised the blood pressure in at least a few residents who consider the matter unchanged until the underlying problems that led to the lack of water pressure are corrected.

"We consider an emergency until the safety pressure [in the fire hydrants] the chief is going to discuss tonight is up where it legally ought to be," Joe Sandblom of Rustic Drive said.

Sullivan tried to put out the firestorm of controversy swirling around the water commissioners by suggesting the crisis was over with the restoration of water pressure and the easing of the water ban. Last week the water commissioners reduced the hours limiting outside watering from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Residents are forbidden to use automatic underground lawn irrigation systems, fill swimming pools or leave single sprinklers attached to a garden hose unattended during the 12-hour period. More stringent restrictions may be imposed if daily water use climbs above the million gallon mark or water pressure problems recur.

Speaking of the complaint about low water pressure in fire hydrants, Sullivan opined, "If we lived with that for a number of years, I don't think we ought to call it a crisis."

Sandblom responded by threatening the town would see a lot of action if improvements were not made. A group of citizens has been collecting signatures to try to force a special town meeting to consider whether the water commission should be appointed rather than elected. Following the meeting, Sandblom said he wasn't sure whether organizers would continue the petition drive or call the whole thing off as a result of the improvements in the water pressure and the surprise resignation of water commissioner Ron Goodwin.

Goodwin will be replaced by a joint vote of the remaining water commissioners and selectmen. Interested residents are encouraged to send a resume or fill out an application in the selectmen's office.

The deadline for applying for the vacancy on the board of water commissioners is July 20. The appointment, good until the spring elections, will be made July 25 or August 1.

The deadline for applying for the vacancy is July 20. The appointment, good until the spring elections, will be made July 25 or August 1.

Although Fire Chief Roger Lincoln described the fire hydrant situation as "better than it's ever been" after recent repairs to the water system, but added, "It still isn't good."

According to the water department, pressure and water volume in the hydrants varies depending on the size of the water mains in the area. Too many of Cohasset's water mains are four to six inches in diameter and too many lines are dead ends rather than looped, acting water superintendent Steve Nelson has said.

Selectman Peter Pratt left no doubt he intended to see some changes made.

"The point remains . . . the bottom line is a group of citizens have raised the flag," Pratt said. [The system is broken. What we need is a phased approach to get to certain goals."

Pratt said he would not concede the crisis has ended until the town has all the information it needs and the money to fix the problems.

Meters, study to flush out water mess

reserve fund to pay for the study.

The additional $4,000 will come from the Water Commission's engineering budget.

Eventually the cost of the engineering study will be made up through a rate increase to be decided at the next town meeting, according to the Water Commission.

"With such a crisis, you just have to start crawling somewhere," said advisory committee member Ken Ingber. "The hydro-static model is a step that has to be taken."

As for replacing the meters, the water commission will use the remaining $58,000 in its contracted services budget to replace more than 500 defective meters in town.

Replacing the water meters, which should take 90 days will increase the town's revenue for its water service, according to town officials.

Water Commission member Frederick Koed said the town would like to replace at least one fifth of the water meters each year for the next five years.

Replacing 500 this summer will be more than the number replaced over the last ten years, according to the advisory board.

"We have to capture revenue we are not capturing," said selectman Peter Pratt, who endorsed the engineering study and the replacing of 500-plus water meters. "We have to fix our own cash registers."

Cohasset's water problems include low water pressure, especially along the town's so-called "Gold Coast", an antiquated infra-structure, a lack of storage facilities and the loss of major amounts of water during distribution, according to the water commission.

The water problems led to a water ban. As it stands, lawns can be watered by hand-held hose from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.

However, Tutela Engineering Associates will provide the town with only short-term solutions to some of the town's problems.

The engineering firm will compare corrosion levels in different pipes (the cause of low water pressure) and will measure pressure drops in different areas in town.

Hopefully, when its study is complete, the town will have an idea of where the problem areas are and implement minor changes.

"This is the first step in getting out of the woods," said Domenic Tutela.

He went on to say that Cohasset's corrosion in the water system, "is some of the worst I've seen."

Tutela said his firm will provide the town with a working hydro-static model and computer software to modernize the water system.

During a recent water crisis at Cunningham Bridge, the town's water usage had to be charted on the personal computers of Pratt and Koed.

Eventually, residents and town officials have to decide how to make long-term repairs to the town's water system, according to the Water Commission.

It must be decided if the town will re-hire a water superintendent or go the privatization route.

In addition, major engineering repairs may be needed for the water plant, which is 17 years old as well as the water distribution system which is more than 100 years old in some parts of town.

However, a first step has been taken with more promised by town meeting in the fall.

Cohasset's clock is in good hands

smoothly. He'll fix, for example, the broken drive train that currently keeps one of the clock's four faces from showing the correct time.

"It's not that major," said Ripley. "Really, it's not that much different from fixing a clock in someone's home. It doesn't cost the town anything either—all I ask from them is the title of keeper of the clock."

Cohasset's clock has sat in its catbird seat overlooking town square for just about 130 years, according to Ripley's estimate. The clock was built by master clockmaker Edward Howard of Hingham, and although it can now be wound electronically, thanks to Ripley's modifications, the "structural integrity of the clock has not been spoiled."

"You could still run everything manually if you wanted to," Ripley said. "It isn't like the clock at the Paul Pratt library, where they electrified everything, and have had nothing but trouble with it ever since. If they'd just left it alone, that clock would have lasted them a thousand years."

Ripley should know. His tiny, yet comfortable office is a testament to his trade: cuckoos, pendulums, dials and gears whir in the background while cigar boxes filled with bobs, springs, fine screwdrivers and rare watch keys are tucked into every available corner. The end result is a cross between a Museum of Chronology and the opening scene from Back to the Future.

"The man who just left here brought in a French mantel clock," said Ripley, with the relish of a chef describing a culinary masterpiece. "It gave you sunrise and sunset, told the signs of the zodiac, had a moon dial and a calendar, showed the week and the day and even calculated standard and daylight savings time. It would have been a labor of love to repair it. Few people can afford something like that."

Even fewer are willing to lavish the kind of dedication Ripley brings to his job and his duties as clock keeper.

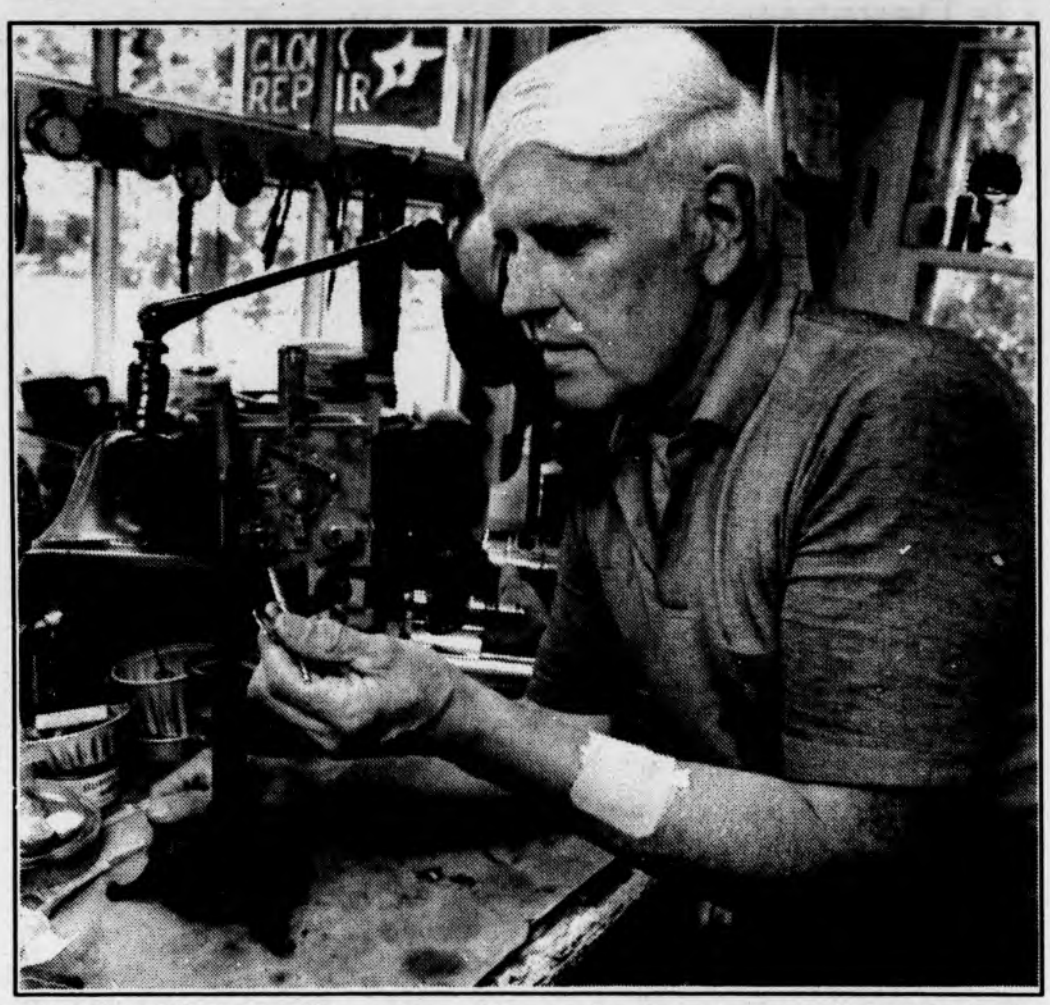
"It's hard to find people to do the kind of things that need to be done for these clocks," Ripley said. "In Hingham they pay someone $2 per week to wind the town clocks. Now, nobody is going to be willing to climb that tower in 110 degree heat unless he really loves what he's doing."

Although he worked with South Shore Vocational Technical School students when he last repaired the clock, and has taught a few people to repair watches, Ripley says that the craftsmen these days capable of understanding and repairing clockwork are few and far between.

"There might be two or three in an area, and then no one else for 50 or 100 miles," Ripley said. "You don't make what you'd call a fantastic living. And it's not easy to learn how to do it. In the old days, clockmakers had apprentices, who began learning the trade at an early age with a contract that said that the master would teach them properly as long as they adhered to certain rules. Most of the time the apprentice ended up marrying the master's daughter, since they both lived in the same home. Now, most people just learn from books or videos, though there's still a certain camaraderie between those of us in the business."

Ripley himself became interested in clock repair during a time when jobs were scarce and self-employment, doing something he loved, became an attractive option. Although he plans to go on fixing clocks for quite some time, and is currently working on building his own, there are some aspects of the business he simply won't do.

"I was recently asked to repair the tower clock in another town," Ripley said. "When I arrived there I noticed that the pile of pigeon droppings in the tower—which can cause spinal meningitis—was about six inches deep. I said, no thank you. That's one thing about Cohasset—they keep their tower clean."



Cohasset's keeper of the town clock, Noel Ripley, is hard at work in his clock shop.

Water repair timetable talked about

Both Sullivan and fellow Selectman Jane Goedecke said they did not want to get drawn into an argument about semantics. They agreed the town needed to set a timetable for when certain corrective measures would be taken to ensure the water pressure problems are a thing of the past. Sullivan suggested benchmarks of 30 days, six months and one year.

The next step in the process, water commissioner Fred Koed said, was the advisory board meeting slated for July 12. Koed said the commission would be asking the advisors to authorize money for a study of the system.

The final piece of the water commission's first phase of corrective measures is entering into a long-term contract for management of the town's water plant.

The water commission hired PSG of Brockton to operate the plant on a temporary basis when their water department superintendent left. That contract expired in June and the commission wants to extend it until September. PSG is in the running for the long-term contract along with SEA and Metcalf & Eddy.

Ultimately the town will have to agree to undertake a massive replacement of its aged, corroded, clogged and undersized water mains. When the Tutela study is complete, the water commission will develop a town meeting warrant.

After some discussion, town officials and interested residents agreed they would rather deal with a project of that size at the regular town meeting, rather than a special meeting in the fall.

Rustic Drive resident David Pottenger said residents need time to understand the water problem isn't restricted to residents along the Jerusalem Road area.

"If you have to solve our problem at a special town meeting, it ain't gonna pass," Pottenger said. "They need to understand it's not just us, it's the whole town."

License expansion refused

Despite some persuasive reasoning by two college-age entrepreneurs, selectmen will not allow James Yess and Ziad Haddad to sell soft drinks along with ice cream at Sandy Beach.

Recently the two men obtained a permit to sell ice cream at Sandy Beach after Peter Kulturides turned his in. Previously, the men's license only permitted them to sell ice cream in Cohasset neighborhoods.

The town restricts the number of transient vendors at the beach and Government Island and it explicitly states what each vendor can sell on the license.

This week Yess and Haddad were back asking for an expansion of their license so they can sell soft drinks.

They said the beach-going public wants drinks with ice cream and that it's inconvenient for customers to have to trek to another vendor to buy soda pop.

Haddad told selectmen that times have changed since they (selectmen) were kids. Nowadays "people kind of expect" to buy soft drinks and candy along with ice cream, he said.

Selectmen Michael H. Sullivan and Martha Gjesteby didn't have a problem with the expansion of the license. They said soft drinks are an ancillary item. Gjesteby noted that she had spent many years at the beach as a mother and grandmother and had always been able to buy ice cream at soft drinks from the same vendor.

But Selectmen Peter Pratt and Merle Brown noted that the issue was fairness. The town restricted other vendors to certain food items and soft drinks, they said.

Hugh Morgan, who holds a transient vendor's license to sell hot dogs and drinks, noted that he must tell his customers who ask for ice cream to go to the other vendor.

"Then let me sell ice cream on my days (at the beach)," he said, responding to the selectmen's discussion.

Bob Martin of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce suggested the vendors move closer together so people wouldn't have to cross the parking lot to buy a soft drink or ice cream.

Because the board voted 2-2, Yess' and Haddad's license stays as is. Selectman Jane Goedecke did not attend that meeting.

The Hearing Center

Have You Heard?

by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist

EARLIER DETECTION OF HEARING LOSS

Because only those newborns who are thought to be at risk for hearing loss are typically screened for hearing problems, only half of hearing losses are detected at birth. The average age at which severe to profound deafness is diagnosed is two and a half years, while milder cases of hearing loss may go undetected until a child reaches the age of five or six. Because a six-month-old baby already begins to grasp the meaning of language, it is critical that hearing losses be detected as early as possible. Even a mild loss can prove to be detrimental to a child's learning. Studies show that a child with a hearing loss in just one ear is ten times more likely to repeat a grade than a child with normal hearing.

Hearing problems can affect people of all ages. THE HEARING CENTER is a flexible walk-in clinic designed to provide expert hearing services for pre-school youngsters through senior adults. It just takes thirty minutes for a private hearing evaluation, and we can tell whether or not a hearing aid would be able to help you. We recognize that there are varied uses and needs for different types of hearing aids. We recommend and carry a variety of brands to enable us to select the one that has the features that best suit your individual needs. Please call us at 1-800-339-9316. David J. Pattison David J. Pattison, 53, of Boynton Beach, Fla., formerly of Cohasset, a representative for the Pharmacy Corporation of America, died at home May 18 after a long illness.

He served 11 years in the Coast Guard.

Mr. Pattison was born and educated in Cohasset and graduated from Cohasset High School.

He leaves his wife, Carol (Wilson) Pattison; two sons, David Michael Pattison of Royal Palm, Fla. and Dennis Joseph Pattison of Lake Worth, Fla.; his parents, Frank J. and Dorothy (Bates) Pattison of Delray Beach, Fla. and Cohasset; a sister, Joanne Pattison Cogill of Cohasset; a niece and two nephews.

A memorial service will be held at St. Anthony's Church at 11:30 a.m. Sunday July 17.

Memorial donations may be made to Hospice of Palm Beach County, 5300 East Ave., West Palm Beach, Fla. 33407.

Florence R. Stoddard

Florence R. (Cummings) Stoddard, 76, of Cohasset, a homemaker, died July 7 at the Southwood Nursing Home in Norwell after a brief illness.

Mrs. Stoddard was born in Boston, educated in the Scituate schools and lived there until moving to Cohasset 45 years ago.

Wife of the late Charles Stoddard, she leaves two sons, Thomas C. Stoddard and Robert W. Stoddard, both of Cohasset; a daughter, Barbara K. Stoddard of Pembroke, and three grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated July 11 in St. Anthony's Church.

Memorial donations may be made to charity.

Jean Olive Wey

Jean Olive Wey, 86, a lover of the Vineyard and a longtime resident of Oak Bluffs, died Friday, June 17 at the Martha's Vineyard Hospital after a long illness.

Mrs. Wey was born in Boston, Feb. 22, 1908. She married George L. Wey, who was the first Chief Engineer of the Massachusetts Port Authority and the first Director of the State Bureau of Transportation and Development, in 1930; and their married life was centered in Winthrop, Mass. where Mrs. Wey devoted herself to her family and to charitable causes. During World War II, Mrs. Wey was a volunteer for the Red Cross Gray Ladies, working in Boston Hospitals in support of the war effort. She was also a volunteer worker in the USO Canteen on the Boston Common. After the war, she continued her volunteer efforts at Beth Israel Hospital and Boston Floating Hospital.

Mrs. Wey was a devoted mother to her four children who were her life and happiness. Neighborhood children were always included in excursions to museums and points of historical significance. She encouraged her children in their educational pursuits and always supported their aims and ambitions.

Mrs. Wey loved the sea and was a strong and able swimmer. In July 1955, at the age of 47, she received a medal from the Humane Society for her heroic efforts in saving the life of a man who was drowning in the ocean off Winthrop, Mass. It was her love for the sea that first attracted Mrs. Wey and her husband to the Vineyard where they both enjoyed swimming in the high surf at South Beach.

They became summer residents in 1954, and retired to the Vineyard in 1972. Four years later, Mr. Wey found Wey Engineering, an engineering and surveying firm in Oak Bluffs. Mrs. Wey centered her island life around her family and experienced the joys of being a grandparent. Her grandchildren were her pride and joy. She spent many wonderful hours in her perennial garden which she tended with the delight and devotion of a true gardener. Strong, determined and brave, she was an inspiration to her family.

Besides her beloved husband George, Mrs. Wey leaves two sons, George C. of Cohasset, a Civil Engineer; Roger W., an Oak Bluffs Selectman and businessman; and a daughter, Dr. Nancy B. Wey of San Jose, Calif., a managing editor of an electronic magazine. Her son, Jonathan Loring Wey, died in 1954. She also leaves her sister, Stephanie Garons of Winthrop, and was predeceased by her sister Wanda Gustat and her brother, Frederick Garons. She had 11 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Wey was a member of the First Church of Winthrop, Methodist and was buried in the family plot in the West Cemetery in Bristol, Connecticut, June 25. The funeral will be private with a memorial service scheduled on the Vineyard July 16 at the Trinity Methodist Church in the Campgrounds. Those who wish may send a donation in Mrs. Wey's memory to the Jimmy Fund, One Harvard St., Brookline 02146-9795.

Be smart about rabies

Rabies is a preventable tragedy.

While it may decimate the raccoon population and infect other wildlife — we can stop it from reaching our families.

Cohasset's first confirmed case of rabies illustrates how important it is that children are educated about the disease.

A rabid raccoon literally turned up at a family's doorstep on July Fourth. Playing outside, the boy, 9, who spotted the animal first, kept his wits about him and ran to get his parents rather than approach the raccoon.

Luckily his parents had discussed rabies and even rented the movies Old Yeller and To Kill a Mockingbird which include scenes depicting the disease.

Talking to our children is one way we can keep rabies at bay.

But experts fear that rabies, which is fatal, may form a bridge to us through our beloved pets, especially cats. State-wide more than a dozen cats have contracted the virus so far.

Natural hunters and roamers and nocturnal by nature — cats often leave the boundaries of their yards to venture into the woods and beyond.

Inoculating our pets is an important step but most of us may not realize a single vaccination is not enough.

The following alert was issued by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (MSPCA):

Any dog or cat vaccinated for rabies for the first time must receive a second vaccination nine-to-12 months after the date of the initial vaccination.

After the second vaccination, the animal may be revaccinated at one-to-three year intervals depending on the recommendation of the vaccine manufacturer.

It's critical to note that if an animal that has been properly vaccinated becomes bitten or exposed to a rabid (or suspected rabid) animal, the animal must receive a booster shot immediately unless it was vaccinated within the last 30 days prior to the bite.

Any animal which has not received its initial two vaccinations nine-to-12 months apart will not be considered currently vaccinated beyond one year of its most recent vaccination, even though it may have received rabies vaccinations at other intervals throughout its life. And any animal that has received its initial two vaccinations nine-to-12 months apart, but now is overdue for a rabies vaccine, will be considered unvaccinated until the next rabies vaccine is administered, the series of two rabies vaccines within nine to 12 months does not have to be repeated.

In situations where the vaccination history cannot be documented, the vaccine should be repeated in nine-to-12 months to ensure long-term protection.

It's not easy to tell if an animal is rabid, some infected animals act in an aggressive manner while others are passive and appear dazed. So if you suspect your pet has been in a fight with or bitten by an unfamiliar animal, do not handle your pet and call your veterinarian. Now is a good a good time to put the telephone number of your veterinarian by the phone with your other important numbers.

If you or someone in your family is bitten, South Shore Hospital recommends you wash the wound with warm soapy water scrubbing the injured area for at least 10 minutes. Then call your family doctor or come to the emergency room.

As Norwell Veterinary Hospital's Dr. Eric Germaine says, "When you deal with rabies, nothing can be blow out of proportion. It's a very dangerous disease."

So be alert and aware and enjoy a safe summer.

Nightly haunt should be shut down

To the Editor:

I have just returned from Osgood School where my daughter is in the rec. program. What I saw there shocked and dismayed me greatly. Twenty-one windows at the back of the school had been broken. Rocks as big as softballs were littered, along with a sea of smashed glass, across desks and carpets of the grade 3 areas. The high outdoor lights, which illuminate the playground at night, were also broken. As well, sadly, the cedar trellis, which framed the 'outdoor classroom' area, was demolished. This little landscaped space was a specially dedicated part of the school yard designed in memory of Courtney Allen, an Osgood student who was killed while riding her bike three years ago. It broke my heart to see such vandalism.

It is obvious that the playground area is a nightly haunt of various groups of kids — from Cohasset as well as other towns. I think we need to block off access to the playground with chains at either entrance each night at 8 p.m. or so. Hopefully this would deter cars full of kids from wreaking havoc behind the school. This wanton, senseless destruction is not an isolated incident. The swim center's parking lot is also awash with shards of broken glass.

I think people ought to be aware that these acts of destruction and vandalism are going on. Parents need to talk to their children about respect and responsibility. Enough is enough.

Thanks, Bill Quigley

To the Editor:

Whatever Bill Quigley, our animal control officer, makes, it ain't enough.

Early in the morning on June 6, after being called by Police Officer Brian Cogill, who came first to my house, Bill helped me to remove a pesky raccoon from my bedroom. While I had already encouraged the baby raccoon's mother and three of its brother and sister raccoons to leave, there was this one little guy crouched in a corner who just didn't want to leave.

Bill had the equipment and the know-how to get that raccoon safely out of my house. He also lost a lot of sleep to help me out. Thank you, Bill Quigley.

Outreach help appreciated

To the Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to publicly share our deepest heart-felt congratulations and appreciation to the 82 other volunteers who joined us for our seventh annual week-long service project workcamp.

The 12 wonderful families whom we helped through the Appalachia Service Project received a total of over 2,500 labor-hours of loving service. Their gifts to us are of the unspeakable kind, beyond value, freely given, forever cherished. Returning July 3, we are all still adjusting to the dramatic shift in cultures.

To everyone in town: find an ASP volunteer, congratulate and thank them; listen to a story or two; and, finally thanks for your support and we hope to hear from you in 1995! "Love isn't love 'till you give it away!" Why do we go? Come along and find out!! Keep the ASP spirit alive!

With much appreciation and love,

It's about time for Greenbush train

To the Editor:

I have just finished reading William Grimes' enlightening and informative column (Cohasset Mariner, June 16) in defense of the CAC (citizens' advisory committee). It was a devastating putdown of a group of historical and apparently hysterical homeowners who find themselves on the brink of an "abandoned" railroad bed which suddenly has arisen like a phoenix that is going to shatter their kitchen windows or topple their hallowed statues on to historical Hingham Square.

Mr. Grimes is, to say the least, a knight in shining armor.

I am 81 years old and at the rate that this donnybrook is progressing, I may not be here when the vaunted Greenbush local comes rumbling through Wheeler Park, waking the locals from their snooze or even dislodging them from their chairs.

Let me tell you a little story, if I may.

I lived in Stoughton for 20 years. I drove down Route 138 long before the "distressway" was built.

When the winter storms came and the driving was bad, we went up to Stoughton Square to the ancient, but still operable, railroad station.

At 8:05 a.m. on the dot the train would leave for Boston, impervious to the mounds of snow along the Band concerts to begin

The first band concert on Cohasset Common will begin at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday July 19, weather permitting. The 30-piece South Shore Concert Band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh will perform.

The concerts are offered free to the public through the support of the South Shore Playhouse Associated Inc.

Local volunteers honored

Cohasset residents Susan McVeigh, Alfred Odermatt and Osborne Ingram have been honored by the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society for outstanding volunteer service in the fight against cancer as officers, committee chairmen and board members of the unit.

McVeigh served as chairman of the service committee of the unit, heading up the group of volunteer drivers who take cancer patients to hospitals for treatment. Odermatt was cited for his service in the Daffodil Days and Jail & Bail fund-raising projects and Ingram was given the Barbara McDonald Award as the outstanding volunteer of the year.

The South Shore Unit of the Cancer Society carries on an extensive program of information, education, referrals and free transportation in Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

'Responding to Anti-Semetic'

Penny Hurwitz, a member of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and a volunteer with the Civil Rights Counsel will speak July 16 at Temple Israel of Nantasket, 9 Hadassah Way, Hull. The topic will be "Responding to Anti-Semetic Incidents.

Saturday Services are from 9 a.m. to noon. Hurwitz will speak during the service. Guest Cantor will be Robert Shapiro from Temple Beth Am, Randolph. The public is invited.

All star softball game

Past and present members of the Boston Bruins will play the Cohasset Firefighters Saturday, July 16, at 2 p.m. at Milliken Field in Cohasset.

In addition to the game, a clown will be on hand for face painting. A visit from Big Bird and Barney will happen also.

There will be free autographs from the Bruins players, raffles and more.

Tickets are $10 per person at the gate. Children under 12 are free.

House warming needs

Following a total-loss fire last fall, a woman and her two sons have been living in a 16-foot camping trailer for 10 months, awaiting the completion of their rebuilt home. They were left with no clothing, no mementos — no insurance. Judy Ritts (383-1422), and her crew of 14 who worked on the re-building of this family's house during their recent trip to western Virginia with the Appalachia Service Project, are spear-heading a two-prong collection: first, they would like to acquire as much used furniture and clothing as possible (women's size 6; boys, 6 and 9 years old, small builds) and ship it in August.

Secondly, with the extras (and other white-elephant type things), they will hold a yard sale July 22 and 23 to raise money to fill in other household needs. Please call Judy to donate whatever items you have that will help this family — direct or yard sale items.

Tax deductible donations may be made to the "Second Congregational Church Youth Group."

Cohasset bells recital

The Seventieth Annual Series of Summer Carillon Recitals at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, will continue Sunday, July 17, at 6 p.m. with a performance by Ohio carillonneur Richard M. Watson. The program will feature original compositions for carillon by Arthur Bigelow, Johan Franco, Ferdinand Timmermans, Matthias Van den Gheyn, and Henry Wesson, patriotic music, American folk songs, and transcriptions from the works of Bach, Carvalho, and Johann Strauss. Mr. Watson is a co-founder of Meeks, Watson & Co., a firm specializing in carillon design, consulting services, the building of carillon consoles, and the tuning of bells. He is a carillonneur member of the Guild of Carillonneurs in North America, and has given recitals and presented papers on carillon design throughout North America.

Watson's Cohasset concert will take place rain or shine; in case of inclement weather, listen from your parked car. Printed programs will be distributed on the common, and will also be available in the church courtyard on Highland Ave., one of the recommended listening places mentioned on the back of the program. Picnics are invited; bring your lawn chair or blanket. Following the concert, a tour of the tower is offered for those interested.

For further information, phone the church at 617/383-1083, or Sally Slade Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's, at 508/475-2599, or Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur, at 617/383-9599.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The Monteiro home at 31 Stockbridge Street is flanked by two beautiful rock gardens filled with color. One of the gardens displays a stone birdbath as a focal point surrounded by Basket of Gold, candytuft, and Sedum. The pristine sight of the house contrasts beautifully with the bright blue shutters. Be sure to drive by and peek at Mary Monteiro's ivy-covered wall with her bright blue door. The day I stopped to admire the garden, Mary dug out and game me a lovely bunch of Lily of the Valley. Thanks, Mary for your generosity and your lovely garden.

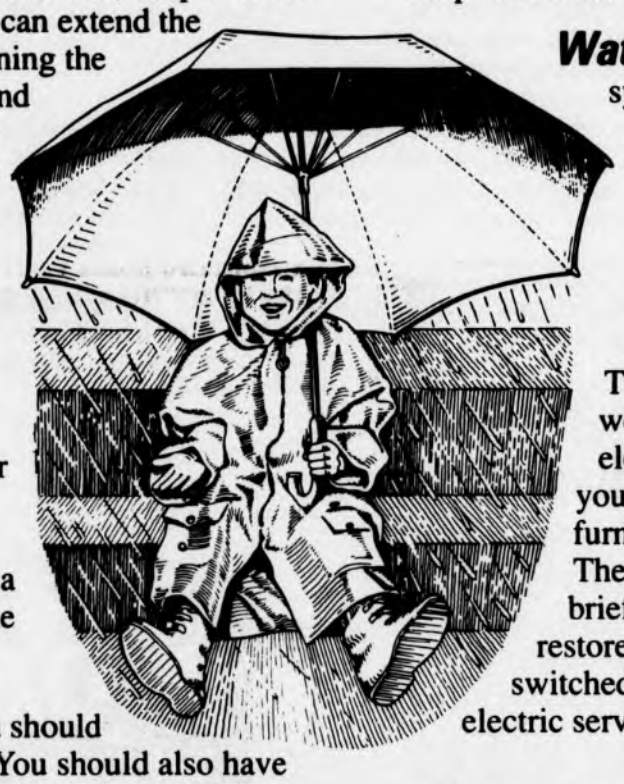
Prepare for Storms Before They Hit!

When little showers turn into big storms, your electric service may be interrupted. However, there are some simple measures you can take to help ensure your comfort and safety during a power outage.

Food...Have canned and packaged foods that need no refrigeration. If you have an infant, keep several days' supply of formula. You can extend the life of perishable foods by turning the controls of your refrigerator and freezer to the coldest position before the storm hits. During winter storms, you can use a picnic cooler outside your home to preserve frozen foods. And don't forget your manual can opener.



Water...Clean containers should be filled with tap water in case your electric water pump or area water supply is affected. Also, you can flush a toilet by pouring water into the bowl.

Medical Supplies...You should have a complete first-aid kit. You should also have an adequate supply of prescription drugs or dietary needs.

Cooking...A fireplace or wood stove can be used for cooking. Gas grills or camp stoves should only be used outdoors. Charcoal grills–because they release carbon monoxide, a deadly poison–should NEVER be used indoors.

Lighting...Camper lanterns and battery-operated lights are safer than candles. And keep an adequate supply of fresh batteries. Propane and oil lanterns are useful. But you need to store the fuel in a safe place.

Radio...A battery-operated, portable radio may be the only way you can get up-to-date information on what's going on during and after a serious storm.

Burning Wood for Heat...
If you have a fireplace or wood stove, keep an emergency supply of dry firewood on hand.

Emergency Generator Safety... If you have an emergency electric generator, please follow these safety precautions: the generator must be UL approved and it should be installed by a licensed electrician and inspected by your municipal wiring inspector. There must be no link between our lines and your generator, because an improperly wired generator could endanger your life and the lives of your neighbors and emergency workers by "backfeeding" electricity from your generator out to the power lines in your neighborhood.

Water Pipes... If your home-heating system is down for an extended period of time due to a winter storm, drain your water pipes and traps. Remember to shut off the main water valve to prevent flooding when the power is restored.

Protect Your Appliances...
Turn off and unplug all appliances that would go on automatically when your electricity is restored. This includes your TV, VCR, microwave, dehumidifier, furnace, water heater and water pump. These appliances could be damaged by a brief voltage surge when the power is restored. Turn off lights, but leave one light switched "on" so that you'll know when your electric service is restored.

Remember to stay away from fallen wires!

Our emergency numbers are open 24 hours a day.

Train raises environmental concerns

letters

To the Editor:

The MBTA is suggesting that we spend 300 million of our tax dollars to bring a train to the South Shore. How can we relate to and understand such an enormous figure? We can't, but what we can do is take a look at how that expenditure will affect you and me locally, and how it will affect our communities.

Regardless of the rhetoric, the fact is that building and maintaining this train will erode our individual town's tax base. At a Scituate town meeting last week the selectmen were asked two very simple questions: 1) What will this train cost our town, and; 2) How specifically will this train benefit our town.

To these two questions there were no answers. We cannot support a system without answers to these fundamental questions. While it is impossible to predict the future, it is relatively easy to examine the past record of the MBTA in other towns. In a study recently done by the Harvard University School of Government, researchers predicted another financial crisis soon because of the MBTA's out-of-control deficit. Since the MBTA was created, their deficit has grown 639 percent. The study found that the MBTA's growing deficit threatens its ability to provide quality transportation. So when it comes time for the MBTA to make good on its promises, the residents of our towns will be called upon to reach into their own pockets to maintain their own systems and to protect their neighbors. We cannot afford to find ourselves in this position.

Local officials have already reported that the MBTA has been unresponsive to the needs of towns like Braintree and Quincy. Their feeling is that when the first accident or oil spill occur in our towns, we will not be equipped to deal with the consequences. The MBTA will not be there to help out our communities, and the money has got to come from somewhere.

Our schools, libraries, police and fire departments are easy targets. It is unacceptable to me to think that my child's school will not get the computer lab they've been waiting for because one of the 43 grade crossings needs repair, or that the library or fire department will have their budgets cut because the operating costs are so high.

Saying that the MBTA will maintain its property has proven in other towns to be a misrepresentation. They don't have the money and even if they did, we, the taxpayers, fund the MBTA. Whether it comes from town, state or federal government, the money ultimately comes out of our pockets.

In response to the question "What will this train cost our towns?", general manager of the MBTA, John Haley, said in a recent TV debate, "If somebody told you that you were getting a free lunch back a few years ago, they weren't being straight with you."

Aside from the financial strain, how will a double-decker diesel train impact our neighborhoods? In many places it's hard to find the Greenbush line right of way because 35-year-old trees grow there now. When you do find it, you may be in Cohasset Center, North Scituate village, or Weymouth Landing or near one of the 43 grade crossings. Try to imagine what it will be like, but please don't indulge in nostalgia.

Don't only imagine the friendly engineer and the waving conductor. Picture what it will really be like. Picture trains going at 60 miles/hour. Railroad tracks are inherently unsafe so there will have to be 17 miles of fencing where there are now trees, grass, streams and wetlands.

Automobile drivers or children running for the school bus need to be warned at every one of the 43 grade crossings, so there will be flashing lights, bells and 115 decibel train noise blasting 43 times on each of the 24 trips.

Noise and vibration from speeding trains will require "mitigation measures," which so far are unspecified. When you picture the reconstructed Greenbush line, you should think of high sound barrier walls that shut off neighbors from each other. You might also picture the graffiti that inevitably will decorate those walls for our visual entertainment.

If you view the tracks from someone's backyard, picture the diesel smoke drifting through the air, slowly settling up to several hundred yards from the tracks. It's not only the immediate abutters who will be wondering why their house is turning gray.

A phrase often heard these days is "quality of life." Take a few minutes to think about it the next time you go near the railroad right of way. It really will help the uncommitted realize what may lied ahead for us and how it will impact on our quality of life in our towns for generations to come.

Governor Weld touts himself as a fiscal conservative and an environmentalist. In a recent Audubon Society newsletter he said that he considered himself a "pretty strong environmentalist" and said that he takes a strong stand behind protection of the environment.

Well, it's difficult to accept that description of anyone who is willing to allow diesel engines to run through bird sanctuaries and marshlands. It's difficult to believe that description when a parking lot for 800 to 1,000 cars, an electrical subpower station, maintenance buildings, and layover facilities are planned for an area which borders the North and South River Estuary in Scituate. How will our environmentalist governor explain away the first oil spill into any one of the protected wetlands along the track?

The environment aside, how can this fiscally conservative governor condone a proposal where ticket revenues cover only 25 percent of operating expenses and the other 75 percent comes from our towns and our state? How can our governor condone a proposal that costs $300 million which will only service approximately 3,000 people (which by the way works out to about $100k per commuter), when a far more efficient and effective alternative is available to us for a mere fraction of the cost? I tend to think that if Winston Churchill were to hear our fiscally conservative governor speak, he would say, "Never before in the history of mankind has so much been spent by so many to service so few."

It's truly a privilege to live next door to the ocean. With so little unspoiled land left to us in this age of development, why not utilize our natural resources? The ocean is there; it's free, why not use it? Why not focus on creating an intermodal form of transportation which is suitable and appropriate to a coastal New England town? We have something very special here, and to allow it to be taken away and destroyed is unconscionable.

That evening would find me in South Station waiting at the gate for the Stoughton 5:14 or even the 5:45 if it was late.

I used to look at the next gate which bore the letters "Greenbush" and often wondered, here the hell is Greenbush?"

The Stoughton local is still running at full capacity. Hasten the day that the Greenbush local will rescue us from an isolated South Shore.

Ted Kennedy's 'Secret Fund'

By David A. Mittell Jr.

Politicus

For 25 years the rap against Senator Ted Kennedy has been about as follows: [illegible]his least gifted of the Kennedys inherited the torch of his brothers and got stuck in a static, uninspired liberalism of pressure groups, which he refused to modify as the policies he espoused exacerbated the problems they were intended to remedy. Secondly, Kennedy has led a publicly dissolute life culminating in the night he left a girl to die when seeking timely rescue would have put him at the scene of a party at which he and several other married men were shacked up with several unmarried women.

In this rap, there are now new facts unless you count a putatively salutary second marriage. The words your darting eye has just perused could have been written in 1970, 1980 or 1990 with as much accuracy as in solstitial June of 1994.

Thus, since the election of 1970 — the first after Chappaquiddick — Massachusetts has held to a tightly stable modus vivendi with Ted Kennedy. Conservative Republicans revile him and unsuccessfully oppose him while using his continuing tenure in office as their all-time leading source of direct mail fundraising. Liberal Democrats, because they agree with his politics, forgive his shortcomings. The larger populace accepts him as a, perhaps dumb but, legitimate dauphin, the scion of the Bay State royal family and a reminder of the time when Hyannisport was the capital of the world on summer weekends.

It strikes me that even those who embrace the worst rap on Ted Kennedy would admit to one consistently missing "fact:" corruption — money corruption. His enemies would explain this away as the luxury of a man who has never had to pay a mortgage or beg for campaign contributions; but at the end of every discussion they must have had to admit that no one could allege that Ted Kennedy has been dirty in the getting or spending of money.

Alas and at long last, there are some new facts on the record; facts that sorely damage the remainder of Kennedy's reputation for public rectitude. The facts are these: For ten years, until March of 1994, Sen. Kennedy had a personal political action committee, or PAC — called Fund for a Democratic Majority — in addition to his personal election committee.

The nominal purpose of the Fund for a Democratic Majority was to support Democratic candidates for office. As such, Ted's PAC was allowed by law to accept contributions of up to $5,000 whereas c contributions to his re-election committee are limited to $1,000. In this way, Ted's PAC raised over $9.2 million in its 10 years of existence. The lawful rub was that these funds were not permitted to be used to sustain Ted's personal political lifestyle.

Yet, in a story largely ignored by other media, Joe Battenfeld of the Boston Herald reported last month that only 9.8 percent of the $9.2 million raised by Ted's PAC was actually dispersed to other Democratic candidates. Even allowing generously for overhead, expenses and Kennedy travel directly related to supporting other Democrats, the obvious conclusion must be that of the $8.4 million of Ted's PAC expenditures remaining after donations to other Democrats, most was used unlawfully sustaining candidate Ted.

Moreover, Joe Battenfeld's analysis of Ted's PAC disbursements bears out the obvious inference — a junket by Kennedy's political aides to an island off Georgia; (Apparently they forget that there are islands off Massachusetts) tickets to the Clinton Inaugural at $15,000; fund-raising trips on behalf of the Kennedy re-election committee; and sweetened wages for Kennedy's regular political aides.

And so it went and it reminds me of nothing so much as "Nixon's Secret Fund," the 1952 scandal that nearly ended Richard Nixon's career at age 39. In that case, opulent Southern California businessmen contributed to an unacknowledged political expense account designed to allow Nixon to compete on an equal footing with wealthier potential candidates for vice president such as Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts. Like Ted's PAC, Nixon's secret fund was separate from his nominal election committee. Like Ted, Nixon used the fund to move himself around the country and ingratiate himself with people who could help him. but unlike Ted's using his PAC to promote himself, the man the Democrats called "Tricky Dick's" using the secret fund to promote himself did not skirt the campaign finance laws of the day.

But its secrecy did not comport with Gen. Eisenhower's admonishment to be "clean as a hound's tooth." Ike nearly kicked Dick off the ticket when it came out. The resourceful Nixon saved himself with the maudlin "perhaps I should resign from the ticket" Checkers speech. Ted Kennedy would borrow in full the tactical line about resigning and the self-pitying tone in his 1969 Chappaquidick apologia.

Those of us who vividly remember Jack and Bobby Kennedy were reminded by the recent passing of Jacqueline Onassis that Camelot had substance in at least one of its parts. The whole of Jackie's life showed that in matters of the soul, social background is mainly irrelevant. and that inner strength of character can come from the projects or from Hammersmith Farm.

On the other hand, Ted Kennedy's use and misuse of his $9 million PAC harkens not to Jack or Bobby Kennedy, but to the methods of old Joe Kennedy whose venality is well-documented. Ted's defenders point out that Sen. Jesse Helms had a better funded PAC used much as Kennedy used his. I would say that a man of 32 years' seniority in the seat of Webster should not be led in his methods by Jesse Helms.

I would note further that the obverse of the inference from Jacqueline Onassis' life is also true: as strength of character can come from anywhere in society, so can its opposite.

Osgood School celebrates Arbor Day

Once again the children at Joseph Osgood School celebrated Arbor Day on a musical note!

Led by music teacher Jack MacInnes, they sang about the beauties of our country and some new songs for our environment. The third graders were masterfully conducted in a recorder concert; while physical education teacher Michael Weydt led third graders in a dance interpretation of the stages of floral life.

This year's program was held in the back courtyard of the school, a departure from its usual location on the front lawn, as this area will be a focus for planting and renewal in the future.

Colorful banners and artistic renditions of Georgia O'Keeffe's work filled the windows that look out on the courtyard.

Joan Kovach spoke to the children about the meaning of Arbor Day, the tree plantings and the garden club's plans to help in the school's efforts to improve their environs with particular attention to the label identification of trees on the unique Nature Trail adjacent to the school playground.

Mrs. Maloney, first grade teacher, spoke of the second graders' planting of forsythia bushes that will begin a "golden friendship chain around our school" much like Frederick Law Olustead's emerald necklace in Boston.

Mrs. Tewksbury and Mrs. Clark represented the first "golden friends" of this memory-chain. Others honored were Mr. Creamer, Mrs. Kealey, Mrs. Montuori and Mrs. DiBenedetto all retired staff members of Osgood.

Honored guests at Osgood's Arbor Day celebration included (L-R) Ruth Clark, Shirley Tewksbury, and Dr. and Mrs. Wayne DeWald.

Tributes were also paid to Dr. Wayne DeWald, a school volunteer, known for his songs, tricks, poems, cribbage playing and ability to make children "think" in many dimensions. His love and devotion to more than 100 children during the past three years was marked with the planting of a Canadian Hemlock near the school's "outdoor classroom" and a book of letters from the "soon-to-be-departing" third graders of their remembrances of a great man and friend to all.

It was another beautiful colorful day at the Osgood School, with friends and family looking on.

As the piano was being rolled back inside — and children were moving efficiently inside with their chairs — Mr. Esposito, the custodian, was quickly and expertly planting our newest tree.

Thanks to all that made this a special and meaningful day.

Summer program offered

The Academic Express, a program of tutoring and enrichment in reading and writing or math is being offered to students in grades K through 6. The program features individual tutoring and small group instruction. Sessions run for two weeks beginning August 1 and 15 and classes meet daily from 8:30 to 10 a.m.

For information call 749-1703.

Study skills workshop

Two study skills workshops for junior high and high school students will once again be held at the Whiton Room of the Hingham Public Library on the following dates: Monday and Wednesday, August 22 and 24, or Tuesday and Thursday, August 23 and 25, from 7 to 8:30 p.m.

The workshops are designed to teach students, regardless of current skills or grade level, how to better organize themselves for school. Topics will include note-taking, outlining, time-management, and test-taking strategies, along with practical solutions to better prepare students for the upcoming school year.

Classes will be taught by Leslie Goldberg, M.Ed., Educational Consultant and Nancy Blumberg, M.Ed., Learning Specialist, both of whom specialize in methods and motivation. Enrollment is limited to 20 students per session, and an early registration discount is available to those paid by July 15. For information call 749-2074 or 749-4929.

Derby parents' news

The Derby Academy Parents' Association reported a very successful year of activities and presented Headmaster Edward Foley with a check for $18,266 for the Annual Fund at its recent Annual Meeting.

The Association sponsored three major events during 1993-94, an auction and social in the fall, a winter fashion show and luncheon and the Derby Spring Fair. Through these events and activities such as Book Fairs, Gift Wrap Sale, and School Photos, the Parents' Association raised funds to support a broad range of programs, projects and functions at the school.

The Cultural Events and Author Series, a major program of the Association, brought authors, artists and performers for Prekindergarten through Grade 9. This year's roster included Mary Hahn, dancer Nikki Hu, the Roxbury Outreach Shakespeare Experience, Ed Emberly, Small Change Theatre, Positive ID, Ladies First, Jan Brett, Poetry Alive, Tribal Rhythm, Maskman, The Rainforest, Marc Brown and Jo-Ann Wangh. The Association also contributed funds and/or volunteer service to support the Derby Yearbook, the Athletic Banquets, Faculty Appreciation Luncheon, Fathers' Breakfast, the New Student Picnic, the Lower School Play, Holiday and Derby Day Teas and many other school functions.

Incoming President Lisa Loring of Duxbury presented 1993-94 President Linda Wakeman of Cohasset with an appreciation gift from the group. Wakeman credited all of the parents for their countless hours of volunteer service to the school for this year's achievements.

Derby Academy in Hingham is an independent school with 247 students through Grade 9. The Derby Parents' Association has been active at the school since the 1930s.

Hanian and Maitland aspire to Olympic greatness

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

For Kevin Hanian and Ben Maitland, their trip to the Junior Olympic National Baseball Tournament in August represents a rare occasion for them to play together on the same team after going at one another for the Major League title in the Cohasset Youth League.

As members of the A's and Red Sox respectively, the two All-Stars were catalysts in their squad's respective bid to capture the league championship.

And after batting in the .500 range during the regular season, neither of the two scrappy ballplayers tailed off once the playoffs got underway and they met again in the semifinals. Hanian finished the postseason with a scintillating .729 average, while Maitland continued his fine from the season where he struck out just three times over the entire spring and early summer.

With the youth league season over, the two Deer Hill School students, are wearing the same uniform as members of the New England Sailors Junior Olympic 10-year-old squad. With players from Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire and pockets from throughout Massachusetts, the Sailors, part of the New England Mariner baseball organization, boast the best young baseball talent in the region.

Hanian and Maitland are taking their roles on the team seriously and expect nothing short of the best they can possibly do when they compete in 16 games over an eight-day period.

"I want to win the championship," said Maitland as he munched on potato chips.

"Same thing, to win," Hanian answered when asked what his goal in Kansas City where the Sailors will face regional Junior Olympic champions from around the country, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Slight of build and still developing, the two players can do it all on the field. In their hometown youth league Maitland pitched and saw action at both shortstop and second base. Hanian played identical positions.

What is unique among the team is that every player pitched at some point during the regular season. And unlike the limits placed on the amount of innings a pitcher could throw in the youth league, Junior Olympic rules are expanded, giving coaches several more options as to who they can pitch.

Maitland is expected to be the No. 4 or 5 pitcher in the rotation and Hanian could also be handed the ball at any given time during the tourney.

While Hanian's strengths lie in his strong hitting and exceptional running on the basepaths, Maitland is especially selective at the plate with an excellent knowledge of the strike zone.

"It continually amazes me that a player as young as Maitland can have such strong baseball skills and instinct," said Sailors coach Steve Almonte, the former University of Florida coach. "Kevin has, what we call in baseball, 'a live bat.'"

Hanian and Maitland, too, have the distinction of being the only two boys from the same town to make the 13-player team from the over 100 potential players who tried out at sessions conducted at Brandeis College in May. The feat also speaks wonders for their talent and the quality of baseball coaching within Cohasset's borders.

"The fact that two (players) have made our team from a small town like Cohasset speaks very well for your local baseball program," said Jay Davidson, the director of baseball for the Sailors.

Maitland and Hanian will prep for the nationals by playing in a three-day tournament this weekend in Toronto, Canada.

And although the Junior Olympics are a great opportunity for Maitland and Hanian to see just what type of talent awaits them outside of New England, the trip is by no means all expenses paid. Many local businesses within the town oftentimes step forward to help fund the trip and the Maitland and Hanian families are hoping Cohasset's will do the same.

Race results corrected

The Mariner regrets the error in reporting the top finishers in the 1994 Hingham Fourth of July Road Race.

The first three Cohasset female runners finishing the 4.6 mile race were Susan Worley finishing 250th with a time of 33:30; Kathy Ofsthun who finished 332nd with a time of 34:20 and Jane Henderson who finished 411th with a time of 35:28.

All three women live on Fair Oaks Lane.

People come up to me all the time and ask two questions.

The first is: "Aren't you the guy who broke into my car and stole my stereo."

The second is: "What can I do to have fun in the summer, Mr. Sports Guy?"

In regards to the first question, I have an alibi that night. I was waiting for a limo ride to the airport.

As for the second question, a more detailed response is necessary.

The following is a list of things I recommend for more summer fun.

1- Take tennis lessons. (Tennis is a fun and exciting sport. And if you really become good, you can officially change your name to "Chad" or "Sandy.")

2- Buy some really cool baggy shorts. (I recommend fluorescent orange with frayed edges. In fact, I'm wearing a pair as I dictate this column to my secretary Louise.)

3- Walk along the beach and quietly "borrow" anything you need from people sunning themselves. (Last weekend, I got a tuna salad sandwich, two Snapples and a puppy in the first 15 minutes alone.)

4- Go to a golf course, wear one of those Greg Norman shark hats and talk with an Australian accent. ("Ey, mate. Two daize ago, I used me drivah to git a pahh.")

5- Make citizens' arrests on any fat guy wearing Spandex shorts. (Last week I saw a guy jogging near Hingham Harbor and I almost drove into the ocean.)

6- Go to Great Woods without tickets and claim to be Billy Idol's younger brother Larry and beg for freebies. (If this doesn't work, scale the wall and run like O.J. in the Rose Bowl.)

7- Go to the Celtics Rookie Camp at Brandeis University and claim to be an alumnus so you can get in free. (However, be prepared with some green. I actually went there and those cheap skates still charged me. Something about an overdue book at the library.)

8- Rollerblade in a tank top. (This is no big deal for guys unless you look like the Michelin Man. As for women, all I can say is I believe in personal freedom and tank tops.)

9- Trap a rabid raccoon and release it in a mall. (You think people walk slowly when they shop. Drop Rocky Raccoon and watch them scatter.)

10- Watch a World Cup soccer game in a South Shore bar and pretend to be from Bulgaria. (Nobody knows what language people from Bulgaria speak, so make up stuff. "Simba fitchein rummola yakan." Pretty easy. I just said your mother eats fish bones.")

11- Have a bunch of friends over and have a "Baywatch" Party. (Whenever Summer or C.J. complain about men, dry skin or unwanted body hair everyone has to drink a beverage. Whenever Mitch or Matt complain about women, dry skin or unwanted body hair, it's time for another round.)

15- Climb to the top of the crane repairing the 3A bridge and do a monster cannonball. (You should see the splash from a 60 foot drop. I almost capsized several boats with my wake.)

Cohasset's next meet will be against Duxbury Aqueducts and will take place Friday, July 15, in Duxbury.

The fifth annual South Shore Health and Educational Foundation golf tournament at Cohasset Golf Club raised more than $40,000 to support health care for critically ill infants. The tournament involved 160 golfers and four "Golden Tee" corporate sponsors. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Purity Services, Advantage Health Corp., and Perini Corp. each contributed $5,000.

In addition to the golf tournament, South Shore Hospital is planning a fundraising gala dinner dance to benefit health care for critically ill infants. "The Spinnaker Ball," Sept. 17 at Marina Bay in Quincy, will be housed in a spectacularly-decorated 18,000 square-foot boathouse and feature international cuisine and first class entertainment. For information on tickets, corporate sponsorship or to volunteer, call (617) 340-8848.

South Shore Health and Educational Foundation generates philanthropic support to advance the mission of the not-for-profit, tax-exempt South Shore Health and Educational Corporation and its affiliates, South Shore Hospital and South Shore Visiting Nurse and Health Services.

Straits Pond in exhibit

Orienting oneself in today's world is a task we all face. Artist Jo-An Levine explores light and shadow — in the context of Carl Jung's theory — in Oriental Brush technique as Hull Arts Gallery's second featured 1994 season artist.

Levine, a Hull resident and long time member and volunteer for the arts cooperative, has also been concerned with the well being of her community. Levine served as a commissioner on the Hull Conservation Commission from 1989 to 1992. During this tenure she brought together various community groups, artists and Hull High School students to cooperatively produce the brochure, The Life and Death of Straits Pond. Levine also served as a community mentor for a freshman advisor group at the Hull Jr./ Sr. High School from 1992 to 1993 and was part of a team of media professionals that taught public relations in the 1993 Waxler Journalism Program.

The gallery is funded in part by the Local Lottery Council, the Carousel Under the Clock Tower Corporation and its members. Hull Arts is a non-profit organization dedicated to education and appreciation of the arts.

The Hull Arts Gallery is open Wednesdays through Sundays; hours and class information may be obtained by calling the gallery at (617) 925-9950.

Award-winning photograph

This photograph, 'Orphan at Reventador,' a scene in Ecuador was captured in black and white by Mariner photographer J. Paul MacDonald of Plymouth and awarded a second place in the 39th annual Festival on the Common, sponsored by the South Shore Art Center.

Fire regionalization could happen in two years

By David McKee
Mariner staff

A five-town regional fire department, involving Norwell, Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham and Hull could be a reality in two years, according to Hull Fire Chief Nick Russo.

"There are issues that need to be resolved, but I believe all five chiefs are behind the concept and, if it is done slowly and correctly, it is possible to introduce radical changes into our firefighting tradition," Russo said.

Fire chiefs from the five towns, as well as various town officials, met Monday at Kimball's by the Sea in Cohasset with consultant Jack W. Snook who reviewed the Seaside Fire and Rescue SErvice consolidation study.

Regionalizing the fire departments will provide better services, be more cost efficient for the towns and offer better safety for firefighters, said Russo.

He also said the move can be made without any firefighter layoffs.

"My opinion is there will be no layoffs and we will seek to have that as a condition," Russo said. "I don't

Outside management debated

The water commissioners and selectmen were expected to decide Wednesday night whether to seek proposals from private firms to manage the water department on a permanent basis.

There are seven employees in the department. The water superintendent's position is filled by a management team from Professional Services Inc.

The firm has been running the department since last March in an effort to address the needed repairs to an antiquated distribution system — some of which is more than 100 years old — and other problems such as low water pressure along Jerusalem Road and lack of storage facilities.

Town meeting voters had rejected a proposal for the selectmen to take control of the water department.

Professional Services is the same firm which has been operating the sewer department for the past few years, said executive secretary Gregory Doyon.

Last week the town hired Tutela Engineering Associates of Wilmington to update a study on the town's water system, completed by SEA Consultants

Ron Rawson dies at age 76

Ron Rawson, who built the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset into a pre-eminent summer entertainment venue during his tenure from 1968 to 1988, died of pancreatic cancer at his home in Cohasset July 18. He was 76.

Mr. Rawson was as a well known broadcaster in the '40s and '50s and a theatre and concert producer.

He began his first theatre in 1951 in Westhampton Beach, N.Y., and later operated the John Drew Theatre in East Hampton, N.Y.

Cohasset's week

County to aid town

The Norfolk County Commission will help Cohasset to survey the intersection of Forest Avenue, King and North Main Streets in Cohasset.

Selectmen had asked assistance of the county engineering department, and the commissioners agreed to provide the engineering assistance. Work will begin within the next few months.

Further study not needed

The conservation commission has ruled that no further study of Inner Little Harbor is necessary at this time regarding the opening and closing of Cat Dam.

The dam is opened on moon tides to adjust the water level as the result of an informal arrangement among the board of selectmen, the highway department and three abutters.

But 10 citizens sought to have the commission take a stronger role in overseeing the management of Inner Little Harbor, arguing that the present management practices may have an adverse effect on the wildlife habitat.

During the June 21 public hearing, information was presented that the town may not own the dam. Furthermore, the commission was reluctant to spend town money for a new study.

Two years ago, the commission undertook a study of the area to address the problems of algae blooms but did not focus on the wildlife habitat.

The commission told the residents they could request a new determination of applicability for orders of conditions if they have evidence that the habitat is being adversely impacted.

The commission also encouraged that an informal dialogue continue among the abutters to reach a consensus.

Shaw's hearing set Aug. 4

Representatives of Shaw's Supermarkets will meet with the zoning board of appeals at 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 4, to discuss expanding the highway business district by 200 feet at certain parcels abutting 739 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy.

The planning board will discuss the matter in time to make its recommendation to the zoning board.

Shaw's plans call for razing the three existing buildings at the 9.7-acre plaza on Route 3A and Beechwood Street and construct a 71,650-square-foot linear building at a cost of about $2 million.

Cohasset Community Garden Club members recently paid a visit to the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home where they delighted residents with an array of fresh flowers. Pictured chatting with resident Pamela Stearns (center) are Knoll activities assistant Lisa Osborn, admissions coordinator Theresa Colby, Knoll employee Ben D'Andrade, and the Garden Club's Linda Reyer, Arthur Lehr and Monique Mascart.

To complete its project, Shaw's planned to acquire an additional 17.8 acres of land adjacent to the plaza to accommodate a new septic system.

Accountant receives award

Cohasset town accountant Michael Buckley has received a certification award from the Massachusetts Municipal Auditors' and Accountants' Association.

To become a certified governmental accountant, Buckley had to attend the association's education programs and pass a two-part examination on municipal finance law and the application of the municipal accounting system.

Kerasiotes meeting sought

Cohasset selectmen plan to follow Scituate's lead and meet with state Transportation Secretary James Kerasiotes to discuss concerns regarding restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad project.

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan suggested the board try to meet with Kerasiotes to determine what the assessment structure will be if the train is restored.

Scituate selectmen, who are unanimous in their support for the train, petitioned Governor William Weld recently to get the Greenbush line off the starting blocks. Cohasset selectmen are divided in their support for the project.

Bates kindred to hold reunion

A newly reorganized Bates Association will gather this weekend in Scituate, at the Little Red Schoolhouse on Cudworth Road, to exchange family data, to socialize and to help other Bates descendants trace back to their immigrant ancestors.

Many Bates descendants reside in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate; others are scattered throughout the United States.

The Bates Association was revived more than a year ago in conjunction with the 100th anniversary of the birth of Katharine Lee Bates, a Wellesley College professor who wrote "America the Beautiful."

Since that core group from the different branches of the Bates family met in Falmouth July 23, 1993, the association has been legally reinstated and has gathered hundreds of new members.

The group will meet at the Little Red Schoolhouse, home of the Scituate Historical Society, at 3 p.m. Friday, July 22, with a general meeting scheduled at 10 a.m. Saturday, July 23. Dr. C. Benjamin Bates will present an illustrated talk, "Trials of Our Ancestors Here and Abroad."

In the afternoon, Martha C. Bates will lead a workshop about family information exchange, while Mary Jean Evans will talk about computer technology to trace ancestry.

Tours of Hingham and Weymouth will be held Sunday afternoon, beginning from the Old Ship Church in Hingham, built in 1681 and believed to be the oldest house for public worship which still stands on its original site.

Parts of the first meeting house, built in 1635, were used in the construction of the existing structure.

And, of course, the group will visit the Old Scituate Light at Cedar Point.

The first Bates Association was formed in 1907, following a Bates family reunion in Boston at the old Brunswick Hotel. Following the reunion, the association began publishing The Bates Bulletin to provide information about the earliest families and link "cousins" together.

At that reunion, officers were elected, including former Massachusetts Gov. John L. Bates of Boston who was named president.

Vice presidents chosen at that time were Frank A. Bates of South Braintree, representing descendants of Edward of Weymouth; Albert C. Bates of Hartford, Conn., representing the descendants of James of Dorchester, and William Clinton Bates of Cambridge, representing the descendants of Clement of Hingham.

New town sealer needed

Lot E. Bates, Jr. said he plans to step down as the town's sealer of weights and measures as soon as a replacement can be found.

Interested applicants should leave their name at the selectmen's office. For information on qualifications, call 383-9900.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

REDUCE TAXABLE PROFIT

QUESTION: I am 45 and am about to sell my home for a huge profit and move into an apartment. Is there any way I can reduce the tax on the expected profit?

ANSWER: Since you will not be reinvesting your proceeds into another home or opting for the once-in-a-lifetime $125,000 exemption for those over 55, your profit will be taxable. You can increase your basis and reduce your taxable profit by deducting from the sales figure, expenses, such as: selling commission, deed preparation, legal and appraisal fees, and any escrow fees. You can also deduct the cost of any capital improvements made over the years such as a room addition or new roof or fence.

Health Agent believes most raccoons rabid

By Sean P. Sweeney
Cohasset Mariner

Health Agent Joseph R. Godzik told his board Tuesday that much of the raccoon population in Cohasset is rabid.

Although a test performed on a raccoon July 18 yielded negative test results, since that time another incident of erratic animal behavior occurred at 200 North Main St. where a skunk was observed to be acting in a peculiar fashion.

According to Godzik the animal was destroyed by the Cohasset Chief of Police before being turned over to health authorities. Godzik will arrange for a rabies test this week, he told the health board.

According to Godzik, rabies is particularly common among raccoons and skunks. It is less common among squirrels since most rodents are very resistant to the disease.

Residents are urged by the Board to report erratic animal behavior to the police department or the animal control officer so the animal can be handled properly and tested. Under present regulations, once two animals in a town test positive for rabies, the town is no longer required to conduct further tests and is warranted in assuming that all erratically behaving animals are rabid.

Godzik also pointed out that another disease which could cause erratic behavior in animals is distemper. He stressed that rabid animals are more likely than those with distemper to be aggressive.

In other business, Godzik advised the board that the town's engineering consultants Camp, Dresser & McKee have advised him that Cohasset is 11th on the list of towns which will receive surplus clay from the Central Artery Project for use in capping the town's landfill. The board believes that this is encouraging in light of the fact that 89 communities filed applications for the clay.

The board also addressed the issue of existing financial assurances regarding the costs of closure and maintenance after closure of the Cohasset Heights Landfill. The board is requiring further financial assurances of the landfill owner to guarantee that sufficient funds will be available for closure and maintenance of the site.

The board also agreed to conduct a public hearing to address potential changes to the board's bedroom exemption policy regarding glassed rooms and lofts. Dr. Godzik advised the board that a review of the policy might be in order in light of the fact that many building plans are coming before the board with glassed rooms and/or lofts, intended to be used as bedrooms, but which are exempt under present regulations. This is of concern to the board because septic system requirements are based on the number of bedrooms in a home. The board will advertise the hearing for public comment.

The board also granted four variances to the owners of property located at 16 Cedar Lane in order for the owners to repair a failed cesspool and trench system.

The health board's next three meetings will be held Aug. 16, Sept. 14 and 27.

Band concert set Aug. 2

The second band concert on Cohasset Common will be held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 2.

Performing will be the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh. The public is invited to attend recreation commission concerts and, because of the continued support and generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc., concerts are free of charge.

Bring your own lawn chair or blanket to sit on from time to time; inspect repellant can be a good item to have on hand.

Benefit yard sale

This Saturday, July 23, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at 22 Red Gate Lane, Cohasset, (off North Main Street at the Little League field), there will be a yard sale to benefit a family in Appalachia burned out of their home last fall. They lost everything.

Tax deductible donations of items for the yard sale and/or re-furnishing their home will be accepted through Friday evening. Tax deductible cash donations will be graciously accepted as well (make checks payable to: Second Congregational Youth Group). Then come and buy on Saturday. (Rain location, 71 Pleasant St.)

think we are in a position to make layoffs. Most towns are already at bare level staffing. More cuts would be pretty drastic."

Snook, president of Management Development Institute, a fire department consulting firm, is also the fire chief of Tualatin Valley Fire and Rescue, a nine-city regional fire department in Oregon. Tualatin Valley was one of the first departments to regionalize services.

The regionalization study was paid by a state grant.

In addition, the group studied the steps needed in the communication and equipment ends of a merger.

Snook said the move to regionalize fire services could lose momentum if not acted upon soon.

"People have been working on it for two-and-a-half years," he said. "And there is some frustration at the fire chiefs level. If there isn't some positive action soon, this could lose some steam. But I'm confident everyone involved will look at what is best for the five towns."

Snook said there are several roadblocks that stand in the way of regionalizing the five towns — politics, timing, culture, Proposition 2 1/2, how to pay for everything and union participation.

These are similar problems faced by other towns throughout the nation, he said.

"The questions raised here are just about the same ones raised in every community in the country," he said. "But from my experience, once the consolidation is under way and the departments merge, the concerns go away."

Snook said political concerns are probably the biggest.

"Historically, government is not used to restructuring and consolidating," he said. "Corporate America does it every day. You have to be competitive financially or you are out of business. This move will lead to more efficiency, savings and better productivity."

However, Russo said regionalizing the five towns is not an instance of government simply copying big business.

"I'm into this for efficiency and safety," he said, "It is a big mistake to view this as just a corporate move. That is not our goal. Our goal is to pool resources and deliver better service."

Norwell selectman Richard Merritt said he is skeptical about more government involvement.

"I'm a natural skeptic," he said. "And today people have less and less local control over less and less money, and I want to make sure if this is done, it is done the right way."

He also said that town residents like to get to know the firemen in town and having a regional fire department could mean a less personal touch.

"There are a lot of people on a first name basis with their firefighters, and that means a lot," he said.

Snook said the personal touch is something a regional fire department will retain.

"You can design a system that can deal with those concerns," he said. "In my area, we protect 360,000 people and you can ask anyone of them about the personal touch.

"But in the end, it's not about whose name is on the truck or what color it is. People want quick, efficient service and this will provide that for all five towns."

Snook said a five-town regionalized fire department will be able to handle multiple emergencies at the same time.

"More services can be provided with a regional system," he said. "And with the unique problems in this area like storm damage along the coast, the regional system will provide even more benefits."

As for the costs involved, Snook said initial funding for new construction of a central communication system as well as some equipment purch,ases will be needed. However, the savings will be seen immediately and after five or 10 years, the savings will be more pronounced.

"They say in business sometimes you have to spend money to make money," he said. "This is a case of some initial costs leading to more savings down the road."

Matters such as how the merger will be financed and its exact structure are still being debated by the regionalization committee.

"Concerns have to be addressed and today was a good meeting for all involved," Russo said. "But there is still a lot of work to be done. Hopefully, we can all put our heads together and do what's best for everyone."

Rotary installs new officers

At its installation of officers, June 27, at the Lightkeepers residence on Government Island, Tom Gruber was installed as president of the Cohasset Rotary.

Members of the Board of Directors for the 1994-1995 term are Peter Pearce, Austin Lyne, Ed Fox, Tom Gruber, Cathy Dwyer, Peter Workman and J.T. Price.

Gruber, who is principal of T.L. Gruber & Associates, an engineering and management consulting group based in Cohasset, was inducted by Ed Mulvey and will assume office July 1 for a one year term.

Gruber is one of 26,000 incoming Rotary presidents residing in more than 180 countries and regions throughout the world, serving over 1.1 million members.

Cohasset Rotary meets Monday evenings at 6:30 p.m. If you are interested in finding out more about Rotary or you would like to make a presentation to the group please send a note to: Cohasset Rotary Club, P.O. Box 36, Cohasset 02025.

Hagerty members named

Selectmen appointed Cohasset citizens Joseph A. Migliaccio, Claire Flannery, Beth Christoffel, and Robert V. Davenport to the open seats on the Hagerty Property Acquisition Committee.

David Wadsworth, town historian and archivist; and Maxwell Pounder, architect, were appointed as ex-officio members.

Selectmen invited applicants James Ward, Don Trisler, and Steven E. Daly to attend the group's committee meetings and said the men would be considered for any seats that open up in the future.

The 15-member Hagerty committee is working on a plan for the 2-acre harborfront parcel bought by the town last year.

Artists' reception July 21

The Friends of the Cohasset Library are presenting "... Down to the Seas," an exhibit by local artists, now through Sept. 15 and will host an opening reception from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Thursday, July 21.

The collection contains nautical images and local nautical scenes by South Shore Art Center's gallery artists who include Janet Blagdon, Kerstin MacNeill, Dianne Panarelli Miller, A.M. Murphy and Jean Simms.

Art Center classes set

Registration is open for classes at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, to be held Aug. 8 through Sept. 3. For information call the center at 383-2787.

Courses for young adults in grades 7 through 12 include Colored Pencil, Drawing and Painting for Grades 9 through 12, Cartooning and Sculpture Studio.

Young artists in grades 1 through 3 are offered Art and Music, Papier Maché Creatures, Castles, Knights, Kings and Queens; Watercolor Painting, Be A Puppeteer, Handbuilding and Wheel for Kids and Cartooning.

Adult courses include Beginning Drawing, Beginning Painting, Colored Pencil, Clay for Adults, Introduction to Monprint/Monotype, Intermediate Monoprint/Collagraph/Intaglio and Outdoor Watercolor.

House warming needs

Following a total-loss fire last fall, a woman and her two sons have been living in a 16-foot camping trailer for 10 months, awaiting the completion of their rebuilt home. They were left with no clothing, no mementos — no insurance. Judy Ritts (383-1422), and her crew of 14 who worked on the re-building of this family's house during their recent trip to western Virginia with the Appalachia Service Project, are spear-heading a two-prong collection: first, they would like to acquire as much used furniture and clothing as possible (women's size 6; boys, 6 and 9 years old, small builds) and ship it in August.

Secondly, with the extras (and other white-elephant type things), they will hold a yard sale July 22 and 23 to raise money to fill in other household needs. Please call Judy to donate whatever items you have that will help this family — direct or yard sale items.

Tax deductible donations may be made to the "Second Congregational Church Youth Group."

Here's good news to start your week, Meg Gallagher is feeling so much better!! As most know, Meg had a bout with bronchial pneumonia which had her hospitalized for quite some time. She has been home for a couple of weeks now, and hopes to return to CHS within a short period of time. Won't it be nice to welcome her back?

Speaking of CHS, have been asked to remind all of you athletes of physical examinations for fall sports so that you can work your vacations around them! As everyone knows, an exam is a must before you can play your named sport! Football will be Thursday, Aug. 25, at 1:30 p.m. in the health room, and boys' soccer will be Friday, Aug. 26, same location, at 9:15 a.m. Dr. Robert T. Sceery, school physician, will be the one to give you the okay to play. If you are unable to take advantage of the physical at this time, you will need to be examined by your family physician and get a note stating that you are in good physical condition to participate in athletics.

Dianne Taylor makes the news this week. Dianne, Joyce Hoffman and Mary Hartwell were the guests of Barbara Donahue at the Ridge Golf Club in Sandwich last week, and Dianne almost didn't go due to a badly cut finger. Well, guess what happened folks. .she got a hole in one and was also nearest to the pin. And guess who was there to congratulate her? Bobby Orr! One would bet that Dianne might almost be willing to cut her finger again to get results like that, 'though she probably wouldn't recommend it.

Derby Academy released its headmaster's list certificates for the third term and Cohassetites excelled. Hats off to Patrick Gaughen, Sydney Johnston, Ryan McWilliams, Corinna Noering and Beth Pierson. Second honors list is great too: Geoffrey McWilliams, Carter Noon, Theodore Noon, Morgan Pierson, Ian Simons, James Simons, Ryan Staszko and Wiley Wakeman all qualified for that honor.

News from Boston University, who awarded 4,304 academic degrees recently. Cohasset residents were Christopher J. McElroy, BSBA in Business Administration and Management; Judith A. Murray, MBA in Business Administration and Management; Philip Tedeschi, MBA in Business Administration and Management; Raymond Van Der Werf, CAGS in Endodontics; and, Tara P. Volungis, BSBA in Business Administration and Management, magna cum laude. Congratulations.

The Hajjar family has news to share, Jean and Steven became proud parents of Nicole Dolores June 13. Nicole was born at 10:27 a.m. and weighed 8 pounds. She joins brother, Michael and sister Danielle who must be thrilled. Nicole sure has lots of people to love her, grandparents Charles DeAngelo and Toufic and Linda Hajjar, all of Quincy.

Carter Noon of Cohasset is the Massachusetts winner in the Coleman Natural Meats 1994 essay contest. Carter's essay on raising animals and crops without harming the environment placed seventh out of more than 30,000 entries in the national contest. Carter, a student at Derby Academy, learned about natural farming from his grandmother.

Congratulations go to William A. Sestito, who graduated from Massasoit Community College last month.

Hartwick College informs us that Julienne R. Guemere, daughter of Kathleen Guemere of Cohasset and Larry Guemere of Boston, has been named to the spring term dean's list achieving at least a 3.40 grade point average.

Tonight is a big night. Bob Thompson Jr. will be speaking at the Hull Lifesaving Museum about coastal storms and hurricanes. As many of you know, Bob is the Southern New England manager and meteorologist in charge, based in Taunton. We suspect that Bob's dad, the wonderful Mr. Thompson, who taught so many of us all of the sciences at CHS, inspired Bob Jr. to be as terrific as he is. Of course mom, Jean, had a hand in it too. Be sure to attend tonight at 7:30, Bob's talk is open to the public, is free of charge, and promises to be most informative.

Did you know that Ellery H. Clark Jr. was presented a two-volume paperback Chinese edition of Sea Power by the Republic of China? Mr. Clark was one of the 15 original authors of the classic, and although he doesn't read Mandarin, you can be sure that he appreciated their kindness very much! Mr. Clark is a retired captain of the US Navy.

Hats off to Lori Gallant who achieved dean's list status at Westfield State College for the Spring 1994 semester. Lori's major is psychology.

Finally, we want to give a standing ovation to three dedicated volunteers, Susan McVeigh, Al Odermatt and Ozzie Ingram, all of whom have been honored by the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society for outstanding volunteer service in the fight against cancer. For all of the hard work, patience and devotion that you have shown to those in need, we thank you.

Please let us in on your latest news, we all love to hear it.

Ron Rawson, 76, dies at his Cohasset home

Ron Rawson

He also mounted productions for touring the then-thriving summer circuit.

while there, he produced a successful tryout of a new play, "Farewell, Farewell, Eugene." he engaged the late great character actress Margaret Rutherford for the lead role and produced a successful run at the Garrick Theatre in London.

Later, he brought the play to the Helen Hayes Theatre in New York, introducing the actress to Broadway audiences. The cast also included Mildred Dunnock and Leueen MacGrath.

He was instrumental in launching the careers of many actors and presented Eva Marie Saint, Tammy Grimes, Bert Parks and Keir Dullea in their first stage roles. Walter Matthau was a member of his company in East Hampton.

In the 1940s through the '60s Mr. Rawson was a leading commercial spokesman and program announcer on radio and later on television.

he was identified with such programs as "The Hour of Charm," "Mr. & Mrs. North," "Can You Top This," "adventures of the Thin Man," "Information Please," "The Colgate Comedy Hour" and "The Kate Smith Show."

He was one of the most active announcers on radio serials as well, such as "Life Can Be Beautiful," "Portia Faces Life," "The Right to Happiness" and others.

Mr. Rawson was a past president of the New York Screen Actors Guild and had served as a national officer of the guild. At the time of his death he was chairman of the Motion Picture Players Welfare Fund in New York.

Mr. Rawson also was president of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset and a member of the Old Goats Club, a Cohasset-based club for retired gentlemen.

Born in Clear Lake, Iowa, he maintained residences in Cohasset and in New York City.

He leaves his wife, Dr. Ruth (Miller) Rawson; two daughters, Jan McCormick of Chicago and Jean Rawson-Terhaar of Rockville, Md.; a sister, Marlys Rawson of Iowa, four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Memorial services will be conducted at 4 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 7.

Memorial gifts may be made to Ste. Stephen's Church or to the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset or to the South Shore Visiting Nurse and Health Services in Braintree.

editorial

'New World' was moon walk title 25 years ago

The following was the editorial in the Braintree Forum after the historic moon walk on July 20, 1969. It was written by then-editor Patsy Murray.

Many words of glowing praise and gratitude have been uttered aloud or in print this past week to try to express how all of us feel about three brave men and their achievement.

Those men — two who left man's first footprints on the moon and a lone pilot soaring miles above their heads — deserve the praise and admiration now illuminating them.

And praise is justly due also to all the thousands of scientists and obscure workers who made this dream mission possible.

In a few years when men are based on the moon and space stations whirl over our heads, let us pray we will still continue to look upon the achievement of July 20 with wonder.

But our pride as Americans and our wonder as human beings has got to go beyond applause, beyond the tossing of ticker tape, beyond the momentary and illusive "oneness" that united half a billion of the world's population.

If the achievements of Astronauts Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins are to mean more than a scientific or a national feat, however splendid, then this new leap for mankind must become a personal step for each of us, as it was for them.

To be truly human we have to have our heads in the stars. That old cliché, tarnished by indifference, emerged again on Sunday as a graphic reality. But for most of us the days of our lives will be played out right here on earth. And it behooves us to keep our feet squarely on the ground.

If the conquest of the moon has any true meaning for us, we will have to come back down to earth along with the Astronauts. That means realizing as Anthony Lewis last Sunday put it in the New York Times: "The moon is a finite target. Man is infinite."

We earthlings — as most of us have occasion to realize — are in the throes of what poet Archibald MacLeish has described as "the revolt of the diminished man." With all of our scientific advances — our ability to reach the stars, our ability to obliterate mankind — with all these achievements we have permitted "ourselves to exist in a selfishness and wretchedness and squalor which we have the means to abolish."

The new age we entered last Sunday can provide us, if we take the time to think, with the incentive to tackle with a renewed faith the problems that are crippling our lives here on earth.

What we should stop to think about are the billions of hungry and oppressed who did not watch a television show broadcast from the moon.

For them the moon will remain where it always has been — as far away as justice.

Near to, they and their children are dying — if not always literally perhaps worse still, in spirit.

And they are dying not just in faraway parts of the planet Earth, but right here in America; in Boston, in Braintree.

Sell house, showroom on Hagerty property

letters

To the Editor:

Re. the former Hagerty property down at the harbor: The town should sell the house and showroom on this property, as is, as soon as possible.

You may recall, as I do, the committee "selling" us on the idea of buying this property by indicating in their townwide mailing that there was a house on this property which could be sold for $200,000.

The implication was that this would reduce the actual purchase price of the property from the $450,000 paid, down to a net of $250,000 to be borne by the taxpayers. But now the committee is ignoring that implication by saying they want to keep the house and lease it out long-term.

Thus it's time to speak to the committee, as I am by copy of this letter, and ask them to put this house, as is, immediately on the market.

If not, we the taxpayers are going to be stuck with a tab in excess of $400,000 for this property. The town does not need a meeting room/rental property that it cannot possibly manage or maintain.

Return of train is safety issue

To the Editor:

Wake up Cohasset! We have talked to thousands of you, even got thousands of your signatures on petitions! It's not too late — we're collecting signatures into the fall. There have been a lot of people that have changed their minds after reading up on the train. If you can't be active, do yourself a favor and at least read up and get informed on the train. It's to your benefit.

Write letters, make calls, get signatures on petitions. Volunteer two hours of your time. Join the thousands of your fellow South Shore neighbors who have made themselves aware of issues on the train and have signed petitions!

This is not just a Hingham issue, it's everyone's issue. This train would change the character of our towns forever. It's like that Joni Mitchell song, "Don't it always seem to go that they can't know what they've got till it's gone. The day paradise put up a parking lot."

Listed below are the Cohasset grade crossings:

Beechwood; Cushing (near pond); Spring; Pleasant (Strawberry Parfait); Smith Place; (Carousel Antiques); Sohier (near Osgood School); Rocky Lane; King Street; Main Street (at golf course); three private.

As stated in U.S. Department of Transportation's Rail Highway Grade Crossing Action Plan fact sheet June 13, 1994:

In 1993, 1149 people died in accidents involving the railroad; 626 died at grade crossings; 523 were killed while trespassing on the rail right of way. That could be our children playing on or near the tracks. These deaths were an 8.1 percent increase over 1992.

Does this make sense to put in an 18-mile rail line with 43 grade crossings (street crossings)?

If you'd like to help, call Mandy Burgoon at 383-6917 or Kathi and Doug Yeager at 383-9820.

You can sign a petition at the Cohasset Hardware, Strawberry Parfait, Carousel Antiques, Nuth'n More Natural, French Memories Bakery.

Boat yard plays important role

The following letter was sent to Nancy Baker of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection.

I attended the MEPA hearing July 1 and I am writing to urge that the historic Boat Yard in Cohasset Harbor remain in its current use.

As a resident of Cohasset, I am concerned that any change of use to this site will adversely impact the historic, economic and social environment in which the Boat Yard plays an important role. Over the years we have seen the elimination of water-dependant uses along Cohasset Harbor's shoreline.

The smallest change of the Boat Yard's function will have a direct impact on the commercial lobster men who rely on it for maintenance and repairs, especially in the winter. Recreational boating also relies on the Boat Yard.

Not the least important aspect is the scenic character of this rustic assemblage of buildings which provides a spiritual anchor to the history of shipbuilding and seafaring. They should be preserved for future generations to enjoy.

As a member of the board of directors of the Cohasset Lightkeeper's Corporation, I know that this site is an historic treasure that has been nominated for inclusion in the National Register. It abuts Government Island and other historic landmarks such as the replica of Minot's Light and the Lightkeeper's House (which our organization restored for public use at no expense to taxpayers).

What was accomplished on Government Island can be done again for the greatest good as long as the existing uses, and only these uses, are preserved.

Outside management not viable for running department

letters

The following letter was sent to Cohasset selectmen:

The decision to purchase the water system from the Hingham Water Company in 1950 was based on the premise that under the town ownership service could be improved and the rates could be controlled by the voters.

It was common knowledge that the distribution system was old, and the treatment plant was inadequate and the supply was limited at the time of acquisition; however, under the leadership of many dedicated commissioners, continuing improvements were accomplished.

As the town's growth began to strain the facilities, the voters continued to elect quaiified and dedicated people to the board of commissioners. As you all know, in the late '70s the supply and treatment problems were solved. During that time a program of meter improvement continued, and a long-range distribution system improvement program was developed. (Water System Evaluation by S.E.A. Consultants, Inc. Aug. 1980). All the above was accomplished within a rate structure approved by the voters.

General Laws Chapter 128, acts of 1886, amended by chapter 489, act of 1946 and other subsequent acts were enacted to guide the board of commissioners in their efforts to operate the water department as a self-supporting utility of the town.

I am sure many former commissioners join me in personal frustration to see deterioration for these programs that have occurred in recent years.

I would like to express a few unsolicited opinions. The town must elect commissioners qualified as administrators, with a background in finance and/or engineering. In turn, the commission must appoint a supervisor to manage the day-to-day operation. He or she must be a leader. They are the eyes and ears of the commissioners.

The supervisor should point out the problems and recommend solutions to the board. It is he who must see that the people are provided the best service possible, without regard to political or personal gain. There are hundreds of qualified waterworks people out there that would be happy to work in, and serve Cohasset in that capacity.

I am deeply concerned with the health and well-being of the citizens of Cohasset and the future of what should be one of the best water systems on the South Shore.

The $3.7 million investment to develop an adequate supply and treatment facility, second to none in the area, at the time, was only the first step to achieve that end.

The S.E.A. water system evaluation report must be updated, stage by stage, as the decisions are made to implement each stage. The most logical and cost efficient firm to do this is, of course, S.E.A. Consultants.

Having dedicated over 20 years to the Cohasset water department, 14 years as superintendent, and the rest of my life in related fields, I feel well qualified to voice these opinions and suggestion to your board, knowing full well they cover only a few of the problems that must be dealt with, and ultimately the final decision is the duty of the water commissioners.

sewer department for the past few years, said Doyon.

Last week the town hired Tutela Engineering Associates of Wilmington to update a study on the town's water system, completed by SEA Consultants 14 years ago, and to draw up a hydro-static model of the system. That will cost $19,000.

The commissioners also agreed to replace more than 500 defective water meters within the next 90 days at a cost of about $58,000 in an effort to improve revenue collections for the water service.

According to the advisory board, replacing those meters would exceed the number of replaced meters during the past 10 years.

The next task before the commission and selectmen is to choose a new water commissioner to succeed eight-year commission member Ronald Goodwin, who abruptly resigned July 5.

Deadline to apply for the post was July 20. Candidates will be interviewed either July 25 or Aug. 1, according to Doyon.

At least three residents have expressed interest: Robert E. Kasameyer, principal of REK Associates, a consulting firm whose clients include technology-based companies; James Lagrotteria, an assessor who would continue in that post and who has 35 years' experience in business, and Paul Laugelle, a police officer and a self-employed excavation contractor.

An outside water ban was imposed earlier this summer but eased slightly two weeks ago when the commissioners decided to limit outside watering with a hand-held hose between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m. Although those residents who are supplied by the Massachusetts American Water Company do not have to abide by the ban, Hingham's water company last week restricted outdoor watering to the hours between 6 and 9 p.m.

The serious water distribution problems surfaced during Memorial Day weekend when there was an increased demand.

Lincoln Medallion awarded

Wayne Budd, president of Middlesex Club, awarded the Lincoln Medallion for service to the nation and commonwealth to Polly Logan of Cohasset at the 127th Annual Lincoln Dinner. Budd noted the award has been given to only 17 other residents of Massachusetts.

Logan, who served for 12 years as national committeewoman for Massachusetts, also received the Abigail Adams Award from the Massachusetts Political Caucus and serves on the Massachusetts State Committee, is director of Middlesex Club and on the board of the Legal Defense Fund.

The Middlesex Club, founded in 1867, is the oldest continuing organization in the United States. Founded by Gen. Charles Taylor, who later founded the Boston Globe, was a national organization dedicated to honoring the memory of President Lincoln and the principles for which he stood.

Soccer camp to begin

Registrations for South Shore Soccer Camp for boys and girls ages 8 to 18 are filling rapidly. This is South Shore Soccer Camps fifth year of operation in Cohasset.

If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, it is suggested that you call the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791, immediately to be ensured enrollment.

South Shore Soccer will be offered to both girls and boys the weeks of Aug. 1 to Aug. 5 and Aug. 8 to Aug. 12. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible.

Camp meets daily, Mondays through Fridays, from 9 a.m to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area.

Alcohol awareness served up to license holders

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

What many people don't realize is that alcohol is involved somehow in nearly 80 percent of all crimes committed.

— Clifton Jones
Cohasset safety officer

Drunk driving and underage drinking were the targets last week of Cohasset, Hull, and Scituate police and liquor licensees at an alcohol awareness seminar held at Cohasset's Chart House restaurant.

The seminar, which featured speakers from the Registry of Motor Vehicles and the TIPS training program for alcohol servers, as well as a nationally-renowned civil liability expert, was designed to help bar, restaurant and package store owners protect themselves legally — while protecting everyone else — by working to eliminate drunk driving.

"I don't think anyone here needs to be made aware of the problems caused by drunk drivers," said Cohasset safety officer and event organizer Clifton Jones.

"But what many people don't realize is that alcohol is involved somehow in nearly 80 percent of all crimes committed. We feel that prevention is a better solution than prosecution, and part of that prevention begins right here with what we're doing today."

If some seminar participants were inspired by Jones' words, many were shocked by those of attorney Ronald Beitman who specializes indrunk-driving litigation.

Equipped with a series of enlarged photographs and other exhibits from some of the many liability cases he has argued, Beitman demonstrated how bars and restaurants could lose their licenses — and drivers their lives — due to situations that could easily have been prevented.

"All I spend my days doing is suing bars and restaurants," said Beitman, author of the Practioner's Guide to Liability Litigation.

"There are so many things that licensees I've sued could have done to avoid unnecessary accidents. In many cases, bars and restaurants had policies and procedures in place that are designed to prevent servers from selling alcohol to people who are already intoxicated, and from keeping those people off the road. But too many times, those policies aren't enforced or monitored, and tragedy results."

Beitman explained that bars, restaurants, and package store owners are not the only ones liable for damages in cases of drunk driving. Social hosts — homeowners — who serve alcohol to already drunk guests are legally responsible for any damage those guests may cause to others.

"When you serve alcoholic beverages to anyone, do it as though you were going to be riding home with them," said Beitman. "Because, in essence, you are. If they screw up, your name is going to be on the complaint."

Underage drinking was the other focus of the seminar, and of presentations made by Registry of Motor Vehicles education liason Regina Thomas and Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of Alcohol (TIPS) master trainer Mike Marcantonio.

A bartender by trade, charter member of the Responsible Beverage Service Council, and executive producer of the video series "Project Stop Underage Drinking, Marcantonio gave fellow servers advice on employee training, how to handle wily teens, and how to spot fake I.D.'s.

"You have a right as a server to refuse service to anyone you don't feel comfortable selling alcohol to," said Marcantonio.

Thomas reminded licensees that the only recommended form of identification for Massachusetts drinkers is a Massachusetts driver's license, difficult as this might be for establishments who depend on out-of-state tourists for a large portion of their income.

"It's not fair, and it's not just, but it's the only way they can protect themselves, and it's the law," said Thomas. "Right now the state is undertaking a 90-day pilot program because of World Cup visitors where passports or military I.D.'s are acceptable forms of I.D. until Sept. 13."

"That doesn't make sense," said Marcantonio, when asked about the policy. "How many people in this state know what a Nigerian passport looks like, or could identify a fake one? At least guide books for out-of-state licenses are readily available."

A new, supposedly fakeproof Massachusetts driver's license will be issued sometime between September and January, Thomas said, adding that the document will be "more advanced than that of any other state in the Union."

Servers who attended the seminar agreed that the advice they received there will change the way they do business.

"I think this was terrific. I'd like to see more like it," said Michael Newell of Scituate's Mill Wharf restaurant. "I'll definitely be reinforcing our awareness program."

"I won't take the liability issue so lightly anymore, for one thing," said Nancy Kennealy of the Old Nantasket in Hull. "As Mr. Marcantonio said, you always think it will happen to someone else."

Mammoth Striped Bass lead to fishing frenzy

By David McKee
Mariner staff

All over the South Shore fisherman are pulling in enormous Striped Bass, some reaching more than 40 inches in length.

And some of the hottest spots for landing stripers include the Back River Bridge in Hingham, the "Rockpiles" and the "Glades" in Cohasset and the North and South Rivers.

One recent striper caught off the beach at Third Cliff in Scituate measured 49 inches and weighed 42 pounds, according to Darcy Lund, owner of Harbor Marine Bait and Tackle of Scituate.

"The fishing has been very good for Striped Bass," said Floyd Hagan of Fore River Bait and Tackle of Quincy. "I'd say its 50 percent over last year. I remember fellows coming back last year or the year before saying 'I've been out 15 or 20 times and haven't caught anything worth keeping.' I don't hear that this year."

Lund said fishing is booming on the South Shore due to the large stripers.

"Every single person coming in here is looking to catch stripers," Lund said. "The size restrictions (currently 36 inches) have helped and the water is also getting better."

Striped Bass migrate up South Shore rivers to breed. Forty inch fish could be 10-15 years old, according to Lund.

"This is definitely the time to go for them," she said. "People have been catching some pretty big ones and it should stay like that for a while."

Hagan said the size limitations are strictly enforced by the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife.

"If you're caught you can be fined up to $1,000," he said. "And people generally obey the laws. I don't know of anyone getting fined the full $1,000, but I know a few fellows who were fined a couple hundred each last year."

Stripers are caught with a variety of bait. Chopped Mackerel, Pogies, Sea Worms, eels and even crabs have been effective.

"When the stripers are hitting, there's no one bait that works best," Hagan said.

Hagan said out in the deep ocean, fishermen are still catching Mackerel and Flounder.

"The bays around here are a little too warm for those fish," Hagan said. "But if you go out deeper, where it is colder, you can get some."

There is a 12-inch limit on Flounder. Hagan said some fisherman have been catching 16 and 17-inch Flounder.

Recent size restrictions placed on stripers have contributed to the larger fish, but efforts to control contamination along the waterways have been a big help, according to area experts.

In addition to large stripers, birds such as the Bald Eagle have returned to nest on the South Shore along the North and South Rivers.

Scituate Waterways Commission member Bill Crook put the return of the fish and fowl in blunter terms.

"If the fish come, the birds come back," he said. "And you can see there are a lot of birds so that means there are a lot of fish in the water."

Waterways chairman Jim Casey said the clean water and big fish are getting people excited.

"Not too many years ago people were saying we were losing a valuable resource. But things are looking up," he said. "It is not a total turnaround, but there is hope."

However, the waterways are not out of the woods just yet, according to Mass Audubon Society Southeast Regional director and Marshfield resident David Clapp.

"The rivers are superficially cleaner," he said. "But there are dangers in heavy metals and pesticides. We have to be aware of what is in the mud that surrounds and is underneath the rivers. We have to constantly be on guard."

KIDS FREE AT PLEASANT VALLEY

One of the great values in New England sports is available this week as The PGA TOUR visits the Pleasant Valley Country Club in Sutton for the $1 million New England Classic. Children 12 and under are admitted free of charge every day of the tournament when accompanied by an adult. Adult admission is only $15 daily. This is a terrific opportunity for youngsters to get a free, up-close-and-personal look at some of the best golfers in the world.

This year's field at Pleasant Valley is headlined by such standouts as long-ball hitting John Daly, former U.S. Open and PGA champion Payne Stewart and New England's own Brad Faxon, who is fresh off his excellent showing at last week's British Open in Scotland.

The tournament at Pleasant Valley runs through Sunday, and is presented by Buick Motor Division and Key Buick Dealers of New England.

The professional golf spotlight here on the South Shore next week shines on Blue Hill Country Club in Canton and the 1994 Ping/Welch's Classic.

As usual the Classic has put together an outstanding field of LPGA stars, including Beth Daniel, Pat Bradley, Meg Mallon, Betsy King, Dottie Mochrie, Donna Andrews and defending champion Missie Berteotti.

One of the highlights of the week will be the Junior Clinic Tuesday, July 26, at 4 p.m. Berteotti will host the clinic, which is being co-promoted by the Classic and the WGAM, the governing body of women's golf in Massachusetts.

The clinic is free and open to junior golfers, but you must pre-register by calling the WGAM at (617) 891-4200. Each youngster and accompanying adult will receive a complimentary ticket to one of the tournament rounds later in the week. The actual 72-hole tournament runs Thursday through Sunday, July 28 to 31.

On the amateur golf scene next week, Marshfield Country Club and Cohasset Golf Club will join Woodland Golf Club in hosting the annual Francis Ouimet Invitational.

This 54-hole medal play tournament brings together some of the region's top male amateur players. The event opens Wednesday at Marshfield CC, moves up to Cohasset GC for the second round Thursday and concludes with the final round at Woodland CC Friday.

The Ouimet Invitational is one of the fund-raising efforts of the Francis Ouimet Scholarship Fund, which awarded a record $370,000 in need-based college tuition scholarships in 1993-94. The scholarships were awarded to 239 young men and women. These students had given at least three years "service to golf" as caddies or as helpers to golf superintendants or in pro shop operations at 105 clubs in Massachusetts.

John Salamone of Framingham Country Club, who out-dueled Hingham businessman Joe Keller to capture the '93 Ouimet crown is back as the defending champion. Also in this year's field is Hanover's Bob Bradley (the event's only two-time winner) and Hingham standout Mike Prendergast.

Now that the 1994 World Cup is one for the archives, the major question that now faces the soccer proponents in the United States is just how much of an impact will the tournament make in raising the sport to national prominence, and how long?

Throughout the country there are pockets of fanatical soccer fans. One has to look no further than Sunday's all-day festivities in the North End of Boston and drum beating in Brighton to realize the ethnic groups' enthusiasm was a microcosm of that in Italy and Brazil.

Ironically, it was the developments of the final game between Italy and Brazil that has been Americans' biggest gripe of the sport for years. The two teams battled it out in regulation and then overtime, the result of which remained a scoreless tie.

For some reason, Americans find ties in basketball, football, baseball and hockey, riveting. When you bring up soccer, however, "boring" is the word most often used.

And despite the 3-2 outcome in sudden-death, when Baggio's shot from the penalty line sailed over the net, giving Brazil the victory, the goaltender is at a huge disadvantage when it comes to crunch time. The goaltender must commit himself to the side where he believes the shot will be directed. How many times in the World Cup we see the goaltender break one way while the ball was shot in the opposite direction. It seems like a hugely unfair way to end a game.

—Joe Reardon

Here are some fun things about the World Cup that you may have missed in all the excitement.

1- The world best known soccer player, the great Pele from Brazil who won three World Cups in his career, has a different pronunciation than the one used in the United States. We say his name as "Pay-Lay." But the correct way is "Pell-ay." If you said his name incorrectly in Brazil you could be in some serious trouble.

2- When you make a good pass in soccer, you call it a "Good ball." When you make a bad pass, you call it a "Bad ball." I guess its something like "Good doggie," "Bad doggie."

3- All the best soccer players only go by one name. "Baggio," "Romario," and "Bebeto" are some examples. Most have very long names which include their mother's maiden name. If announcers went by their full names, you would miss all the action.

4- The World Cup itself is about the size of a Pepsi "Big Slam" bottle. All the hoopla and the riots associated with the games is over a trophy that could fit in your glove compartment.

5- Tickets to the World Cup were expensive with a capital X. Someone I know said two tickets to one game, parking and dinner ran in the neighborhood of $300. A pretty exclusive neighborhood.

6- Penalty kicks are used in high

Adult evening tennis lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept ongoing telephone registrations for adult evening tennis classes for all levels of instruction, by calling 383-6791.

Classes will be scheduled as follows: beginners, 6 to 7 p.m., Mondays; intermediates, 7 to 8 p.m., Mondays; advanced, 6 to 7 p.m., Wednesdays; beginners, 7 to 8 p.m., Wednesdays. Other classes will be scheduled as demand indicates.

All sessions are four weeks in duration and cost $35 per person, per session. Teaching will be Bill Stebbins of Cohasset Recreation Department's tennis staff. Participants who do not own or have access to a racquet should indicate this at the time of registration. Non-residents will be accepted on a space available basis. Another evening will be made available should demand indicate.

Basketball camp registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is currently accepting registrations for a boys and girls basketball camp to be held the week of Monday, July 11, in the Cohasset High School gym.

Ron Ford, boys varsity basketball head coach, and his staff will conduct the week-long camp, which is for youngsters age 9 and over. The tuition for basketball camp is $125 per child and camp hours are from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. daily, Monday through Friday, July 11-15.

Registration forms are available at the recreation department office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall. Non-residents will be accepted for basketball camp on a space available basis.

South Shore Soccer camp accepting applications

Registrations for the South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 through 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's fifth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791 in the near future to be assured enrollment.

South Shore Soccer will be offered to both girls and boys during the weeks of Monday through Friday, August 1-5, and August 8-12. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camp weeks must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Mondays through Fridays, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area.

Soccer camp registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP Soccer camp, for children ages 4 through 7 years of age.

VIP Soccer Camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4 through 7. ABC Soccer is especially designed for 4- and 5-year-olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 18-22. The cost is $40 for the week.

Also offered by VIP is a three-hour per day program, meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 18-22 for 6- and 7-year-olds. The cost is $70 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the Front Field of Cohasset High School.

Lacrosse skill clinics

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting telephone registrations at its office at 383-6791 for an evening lacrosse skill development program, designed for youngsters who will enter grades 4, 5 and 6 in September.

Lacrosse clinics are designed to teach the fundamental skills and concepts of lacrosse and will meet Tuesday evenings, 6:30 to 8 p.m., at the Osgood School Field, beginning Tuesday evening, July 12 through August 16.

This specialized developmental program will be instructed by local college and high school lacrosse players and the fee will be $24 per person for the six-week session. Participants will need a helmet and lacrosse stick to enroll. Other equipment will be unnecessary as no contact scrimmages will be held.

school games to decide tie games as well. The World Cup eventually went to penalty kicks this year after two regulation and two overtimes. Area high school coaches don't all like penalty kicks but if two teams played until someone scored they might be there all night. And in a state tourney, a team that went to 14 overtimes would be luggage for the next game.

7- The World Cup is like basketball's "Dream Team" of a couple years ago. Most of the players play pro soccer all over the world and get big money. The World Cup is their way of showing Patriotism. These are not starry-eyed amateurs out there.

8- If you still think that soccer is a wimpy sport consider all the running that happened on Sunday in the final. The two teams played 90 minutes of non-stop regulation play and then 30 minutes of non-stop overtime. Just think of hockey players, one two-minutes shift and they have to cool their jets.

9- If America ever wants to win a World Cup some major changes will have to be made. First of all, baseball, basketball and football will have to be phased out as sports. Other countries have their best athletes playing soccer right from the age of three. We will have to do the same or else we will just be also rans. Imagine a forward line of Michael Jordan, Ken Griffey Jr. and Barry Saunders. "Romario" wouldn't have a chance.

10- Finally, I should have accepted the invited to try out for the U.S. team. I was all set to grow a ponytail and change my name to "Dabo" but I couldn't leave the South Shore sports scene. Many thousands of people would have been heart-broken.

-David McKee

We had a call from a woman from Cohasset who was upset with the fact her name wasn't printed among the results of Hingham's Fourth of July Road Race. The problem was, when the official results were printed and posted in the window of T.C.B.Y., in Hingham Square, the hometowns were not listed next to every finisher. There were gaps of up to 30 runners throughout the 910 entrants with no towns listed.

I took the top-five men and women from Cohasset as they appeared on the overall results. To try and figure out where the other runners were from would have been too time consuming, and quite frankly, not worth the effort.

Chowderfest contest

A soup and chowderfest contest will be held from noon to 3 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 6, at the Bernie King Pavillion, Nantasket Avenue, Hull, opposite the Carousel.

The event is sponsored by the Nantasket Chamber of Commerce in celebration of Hull's 350th birthday.

Several of the South Shore's finest restaurants, including the Mill Wharf, will be participating.

Newcomers list events

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club equally divided money raised from fund-raising events during the 1993-1994 season between Scituate and Cohasset to the following charities:

- Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation
- Paul Pratt Memorial Library
- Food pantries for Scituate and Cohasset
- Scituate Playground Fund.

The following club officers have been elected to serve for the 1994-1995 season:

Sarah Markert and Grace Evans, co-presidents; Allison Moskow, first vice president; Ann Kelly, second vice president; Nancy Friedman, treasurer; Ellen Gibbons, corresponding secretary; Bernadette O'Connell, recording secretary; Andrea Kinnealey and Suzanne Clark, communications secretaries; Corrine Wagner, Scituate membership; Brenda Regan, Cohasset membership; Nancy Reynolds and Martha Gangemi, hospitality; Bonnie Workman, publicity; Margaret Vance and Maribeth Sargnoli, telephoning.

On Sunday, July 24, at 5 p.m. a picnic is planned at Sandy Beach in Cohasset. So, pack up your kids, picnic dinner, blankets and chairs and head over to Sandy Beach for an evening of fun. In case of rain the evening will be cancelled.

In addition to special parties and coffees the club offers members a variety of social activities, including ladies daytime and evening bridge groups, couples' bridge groups, book group, sip 'n' stitch, out-to-lunch bunch, moms and tots playgroup and gourmet group.

All new residents of Scituate and Cohasset or residents experiencing a change in lifestyle are invited to join. For more information, call 545-2458 for Scituate and 383-0454 for Cohasset or drop a line at P.O. Box 623, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Deer Hill School students Melissa Bates, Aryanna Afsher, Meredith Bates, Danielle Kupsc and Jessica Niessink display the wall mural they made for their school.

Straits Pond sprayed to squelch midges

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Despite the possibility of negative impacts on an area of critical environmental concern, Cohasset's Conservation Commission withdrew its opposition to spraying Straits Pond with the chemical pesticide Abate.

The decision came on the heels of a call by the Hull selectmen, Hull town manager and board of health, who declared a public health emergency in their town from an infestation of midges.

In fact, according to Executive Secretary Greg Doyan, Cohasset selectmen authorized spending up to $3,000 to help cover the spraying on the Cohasset side of Straits Pond.

While Cohasset town officials maintain that they have had relatively few complaints about midges on their side of the pond, Hull Town Manager Philip Lemnios says this year's infestation of the small gnatlike bug is worse than ever.

Prevailing south westerly winds carry the midges to the Hull side of the pond, Lemnios said. An increase in nutrients and hotter weather earlier this summer have also contributed to the problem this year.

Cohasset Conservation Commission member Jeffrey Waal, who like the rest of the commission was reticent to approve the spraying, said, "We learned about it just two days before they were going to spray and we said 'wait a minute."

But when Hull's health board declared a health emergency, Cohasset went along with the spraying, said Waal.

"We didn't know how serious the problem was," he added.

But Cohasset resident Anson Whealler, who lives on the pond, knew.

"The town may not have had a lot of complaints, but believe me, it was bad," said Whealler, who believes this year's infestation of the midges is the worst he has seen.

Straits pond is a shallow, warm water body, near the shore line between Hull and Cohasset and is fed by both fresh water and salt water from the Weir River. Failing septic systems and run-off from the homes that surround the pond have made the area an ideal habitat for midges.

These tiny flies grow and breed in sediments on the bottom of brackish water bodies. Unlike mosquitoes, midges do not bite, but they do swarm at night are attracted to light and are small enough to get through door and window screens.

Because of the swarming flies, many Straits Pond residents were unable to open their windows this summer, and the Hull Board of Health feared that people would inhale the insects - especially children.

For all of these reasons Hull declared the midge situation an emergency and received approval from the Department of Environmental Protection and Coastal Zone Management, to spray Abate. Both state agencies had forbidden use of the pesticide two years ago until a study group could be formed to research the problem. Because of the seriousness of the situation this summer, an exception was made and spraying took place late last month.

Because the larvae have been found primarily along a 20-foot band around the pond a small air boat sprayed only the perimeter of the pond with Abate this year. This method is more environmentally sensitive, but is also more costly, said Linda Beres of the Hull Environment and Service Corps.

But in the future, Beres would not recommend the use of Abate to eliminate midges. Beres' study group, which was formed in 1991, is co-funded by Cohasset and consists mainly of Hull High School students who test the water, take fecal samples and count the midge larvae in the pond.

"Abate would not be my choice" said Beres who feels the pesticide BTI is safer for the environment. While it is extremely effective for mosquito control, BTI is not approved for use on midges and Abate is the least noxious of the state approved pesticides, she said. Over time, Beres maintained that the midges will grow resistant to Abate as they had done in the past, making it only a short-term solution to an ongoing problem.

"This year's application was extremely effective," said Beres, because we haven't used it in three years."

Whealler said things are dramatically better but is not sure it can be attributed to the Abate. Whealler said the improvement may be due to the passing of the main hatching period of the midges.

"Whatever it was, I am glad," he said, "because they can make life pretty miserable."

Beres said that use of Abate or even BTI should be reserved for emergency situations only. More longte[r] solutions include keeping the water temperature d[own] keeping the water circulated and maintaining [the] pond as a salt water environment to improve [the] diversity of life within.

According to Beres, in the past the pond has been maintained as a fresh water environment during the winter, by closing off the tide gates. Beres recommends keeping the tide gates open year round to allow the salty waters from the Weir River in. Colder, salty water would prove inhospitable to the midges and Beres said mussels and crabs might prove to be efrective natural predators.

Whealler, who is one of three Straits Pond Committee members, is currently working on a device that would control the tide gates automatically and maintain the pond's water level instead of depending on the tides.

Lemnios said that currently the tide gate is opened three to four times weekly to allow a mix of fresh and cold salty water in the pond.

Midge traps are another way to deal with the clouds of flies, said Whealler, who designed his own, consisting of a piece of sticky fly paper with a light behind it. Midges are attracted to light which made the trap pretty perfective but difficult to maintain. he said.

"Bug zappers work too" said Whealler, adding, "there is not one magic thing to cure the problem - it will be a combination of things that the towns and the people around the pond can do."

Water ban violators could face fines, officials say

Outdoor watering is allowed by hand-held hose only between the hours of 6 a.m. and 10 p.m., selectmen reiterated at their board meeting Monday.

They are frustrated that some citizens are confused about the hours of the outdoor-watering ban and others are blatantly ignoring it.

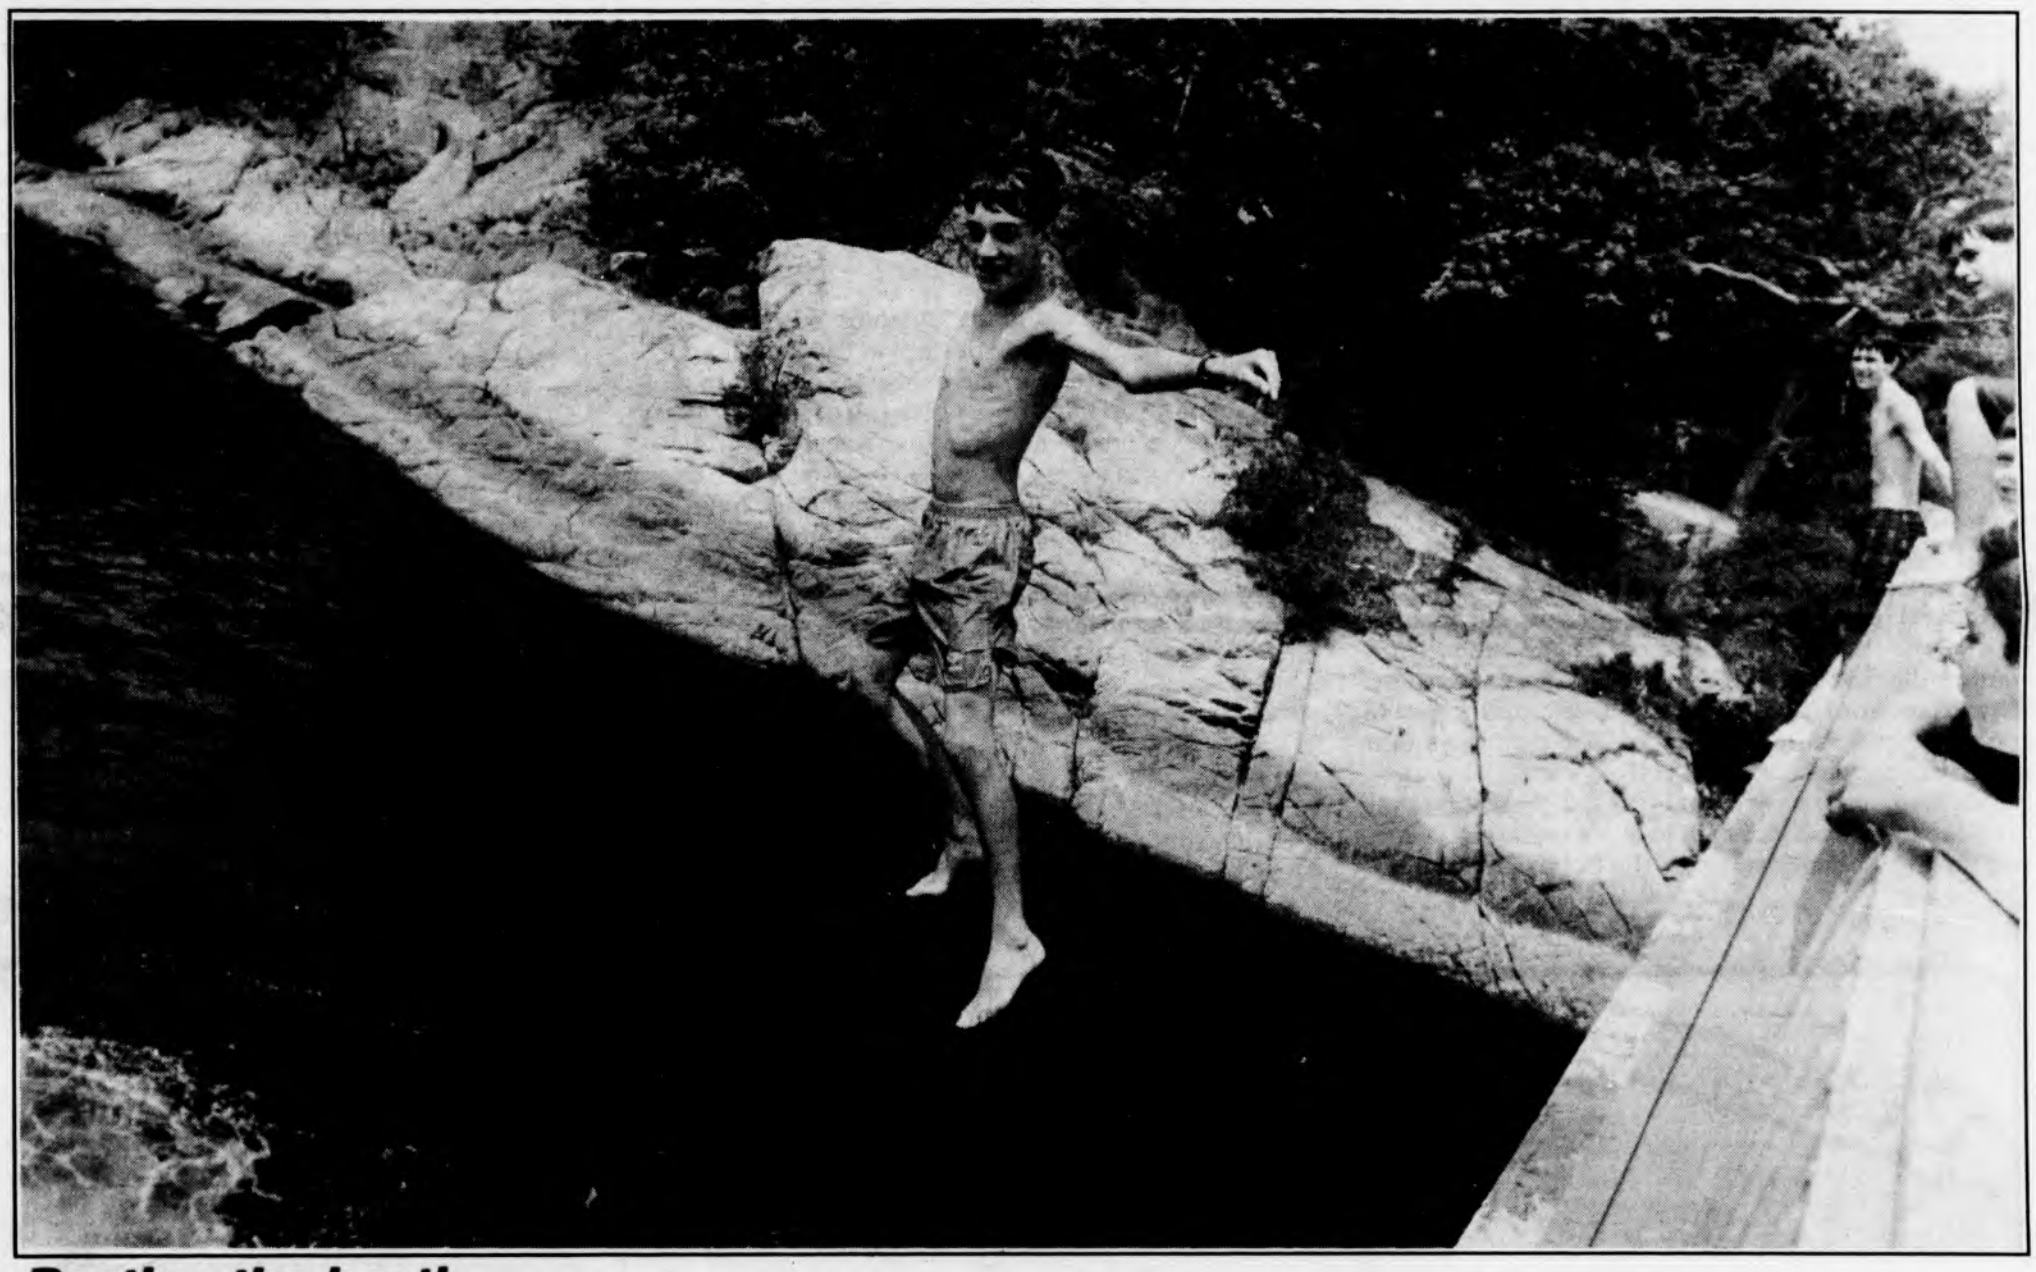
Water ban violators could face fines after selectmen and Town Counsel Richard A. Henderson meet at 8 p.m. tonight in town hall to discuss the matter.

'Residents have to understand that some people can't shower or flush their toilets at some point during the day.'

— Selectman Jane O. Goedecke.

"Residents have to understand that some people can't shower or flush their toilets at some point during the day," Selectman Jane O. Goedecke said.

The town's antiquated distribution system broke down this summer along the town's so-called "Gold Coast" due to excessive demand with the hot weather and in-ground sprinkler systems which stressed the system.



Beating the heat!

Lucas Carr flies through the air on his way down again from the Mill Bridge on Border Street. Police say the number of bridge jumpers is about the same as last year. Leaping, jumping, or diving from the Mill, Cunningham or Cat Dam bridges is in violation of the town by-law. Violators could face fines but that apparently could not be further from this teenager's mind as he cools off on a blistering hot summer day.

New water commissioner to be appointed tonight

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

One of the hottest seats in town is an open one on the board of water commissioners.

Four Cohasset citizens seek appointment to the board which has tried to withstand a firestorm of controversy over handling of the town's water problems.

Selectmen and water commissioners plan to pick one candidate at their joint meeting at 8 p.m. tonight in town hall to fill the unexpired term of former Commission Chairman Ronald Goodwin who resigned earlier this month.

Whoever is selected will fill the post until the April town election.

While James W. Laggrotteria, Robert Kasameyer, Paul J. Laugelle, and Mark Bell didn't have any quick answers to dealing with the town's water distribution crisis, they all presented their credentials and reasons why they feel they can make a difference to selectmen and Water Commissioner William Montouri earlier this week.

Laggrotteria, 107 Howe Road, is a Cohasset native and member of the board of assessors and business manager at Glastonbury Abbey. He said he would bring a business sense to the department.

"I would offer good management practices and procedures to enable those who know how to distrib-

Ice cream venture provides a cool lesson for college kids

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Who doesn't remember the familiar sights and sounds of the ice cream truck? The tinkling bell, or the familiar strain of some repetitive childhood tune, growing steadily louder as the white truck, plastered with full color pictures of every popsicle imaginable, rumbled through your neighborhood on a hot summer day.

It wasn't long before children would scatter for home and the frenzied cries for nickles, dimes and quarters began — mothers could never get those change purses open quickly enough!

Well strawberry shortcakes and chocolate eclair ice cream bars will cost you at least a buck these days, and are far less popular than snow cones and screwballs.

Cohasset's week

Home site causes concern

The Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals expects to issue its decision by Aug. 5 regarding a special permit request by Cohasset residents Donald and Sheila Evans to build a new home on North Main Street.

The board reopened the hearing July 11 at the request of the Evanses. Originally, the special permit hearing was closed last April.

According to zoning board Vice Chairman Mark DiGiacomo, the board asked the petitioners for more information regarding the interpretation of a town bylaw which requires that when construction is to be carried out on land which is adjacent to tidal waters, it must first be shown that none of the land is less than 10 feet above sea level. In addition, DeGiacomo indicated that board wished to give any concerned citizens a forum for discussion and the opportunity to bring to the board's attention any compelling arguments regarding the bylaw's applicability.

The petitioners appeared with their attorney and another expert, who made the argument as to why this bylaw need not be strictly construed by the board. In response, the board heard opposing views from various residents in attendance which supported a strict adherence to the bylaw.

According to DeGiacomo, who was sitting as the chairman for this hearing, the board expects to announce its decision at its meeting of Aug. 4. DeGiacomo indicated that the board will continue to review the matter and any relevant case law on the issue, and will continue to seek input of Town Counsel Richard Henderson.

The proposed construction, which would be located opposite of the north end of Cohasset Common, is intended to be a retirement home for the Cohasset couple. It is its location, rather than its proximity to tidal waters, which has many citizens concerned. If built, the new home is likely to obstruct the view of Little Harbor from the Common.

One such concerned resident is Vic Lanzillotti of North Main Street. Lanzillotti drafted a five-page memorandum which he and others distributed to town residents and members of the various governing boards in Cohasset on July 1.

In his memorandum, Lanzillotti stated that the approval of the Evanses permit request would amount to a major hit to the cause of "maintaining and continually developing Cohasset's maritime heritage, its architectural consistency and safe and sensible conformance for the building of new driveways and structures in our town."

Lanzillotti also pointed out in his memorandum that the Evanses were successful in going to the land court and having a certain parcel of the Cohasset Common re-designated, thus allowing them to build a driveway providing access to the proposed new home. Lanzillotti believes that this will complicate an already dangerous T-shaped intersection near the proposed site. In addition to the safety concern, Lanzillotti pointed out that the view of Little Harbor will be eclipsed forever and that this may affect the eligibility of the common area for registration with the National Register of Historic Places.

Shaw's hearing Aug. 4

Representatives of Shaw's Supermarkets will meet with the zoning board of appeals at 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 4, to discuss expanding the highway business district by 200 feet at certain parcels abutting 739 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy.

The planning board will discuss the matter in time to make its recommendation to the zoning board.

Shaw's plans call for razing the three existing buildings at the 9.7-acre plaza on Route 3A and Beechwood Street and construct a 71,650-square-foot linear building at a cost of about $2 million.

To complete its project, Shaw's planned to acquire an additional 17.8 acres of land adjacent to the plaza to accommodate a new septic system.

Disease warning issued

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik warns residents that Coxsacki disease, a highly contagious virus named after the upstate New York town where it was first discovered, is especially prevalent in Cohasset this summer.

The so-called "foot and mouth" virus which mostly affects children takes many different strains. But symptoms usually include blisters in the mouth and less often on the feet, Godzik explained.

"It is generally a fairly unusual disease but this year we've seen an unusually large number of cases," he said.

Children should be encouraged to wash their hands after using the bathroom and to use strong personal hygiene. Secretions from blisters in the mouth are passed on to the gastrointestinal track, Godzik said.

Parents should not send an infected child to a birthday party or daycare center or other crowded activity, he said.

Bill payments approved

Earlier this week, selectmen approved payment of $1,853 to Town Counsel Richard A. Henderson for professional services provided the town for June.

They also authorized payment of $19,987 to Rosano-Davis Inc. for demolition work at the town-owned Hagerty site off Parker Ave. This amount is 90 percent of the $22,208 owed. Selectmen are witholding [redacted] percent until Rosano-Davis completes all the documentation required by the town.

New sealer is named

Cohasset native Paul L. Migliaccio, 129 Hull Street, is the town's new sealer of weights and measures. Selectmen unanimously approved his appointment Monday. He replaces Lot Bates who is stepping down from the post.

Migliaccio is manager of the maintenance and calibration lab at GTE Government Systems Corp. in Taunton. He has 29 years experience in calibration. He formerly worked for General Dynamics Corp. in Quincy.

The town's sealer makes sure that devices that measure like supermarket scales and gasoline pumps are calibrated.

Call firefighter resigns

Selectmen accepted with regret the resignation of call-firefighter Raymond D. Sanborn, Jr., this week.

Sanborn resigned to accept a permanent firefighter's position in Scituate.

Fire Chief Roger W. Lincoln praised Sanborn's service to the town.

"Ray Sanborn served faithfully and honorably as a member of the Cohasset Fire Department and his recent appointment to the Scituate Fire Department is well deserved," Lincoln wrote in a memo to selectmen.

Group lobbies for landfill hearing

S.A.F.E., a grass-roots group opposed to the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) off Route 3A, isn't taking anything for granted.

Members plan to lobby state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe for a public hearing to comment on the Supplemental Final Environmental Impact Report (SFEIR) recently filed by CHL.

S.A.F.E. spokesman John McNabb told selectmen Monday that Coxe still needs to hear a clear message from those opposed to the expansion.

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan questioned whether another public hearing is really necessary. The public hearing in February on the FEIR drew upwards of 300 people.

"What are we going to add to the process that we didn't already cover?" he asked.

McNabb said that essentially CHL is having another "shot at it" and the town should has well.

"A major factor in the defeat of the last one (environmental impact report) was not just the facts but that the secretary was able to see the public reaction against it (report)," he said.

Selectman Martha K. Gjesteby agreed.

"It's worth a try. You've got to show the flag again," she said.

Selectmen agreed to ask Coxe for a public hearing on the SFEIR, copies of which are available at the Paul Pratt Library. Citizens have until August 24 to submit comments on the report.

Cohasset's week

Advisors stay on board

Town Moderator George Marlette reappointed Kenneth Ingber, 250 Beechwood St., and Deborah S. Cook, 281 King St., to the advisory committeed. Their new terms expire in June 1997.

Candidates are interviewed

Monday selectmen interviewed Michael Dick, 3 Arrowwood St., and Monty Najjar, 368 Atlantic Ave., who are two of three potential candidates for a vacancy on the computer study committee. Gary R. Garber, M.D. has also thrown his hat into the ring but did not attend Monday's meeting.

Dick, who is new to town, runs his own company which sets up computer networks.

Najjar, who grew up in town, is a computer professional with Harvard Community Health.

Both men said they felt their computer expertise could be useful as the town tries to update its computer system.

Thirsty town seeks water distribution solutions

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset citizens blame selfish sprinkler users and a lack of adequate restriction enforcement for the continuing water crisis in their town.

That, at least, was the consensus of those who attended a special joint meeting of selectmen and water commissioners July 13.

"When your water pressure drops from 60 to 18 pounds per square inch in less than four hours, that's a sign that something's happening, and it has to be the sprinklers," said Mary Hartwell. "The present ban must be improved. Right now, I'm walking on eggshells every time I go to bed, knowing that if there's a major fire in Cohasset the fire department might not have enough water pressure to fight it."

Joe Sandblom, a resident of Rustic Drive in Cohasset's parched "Gold Coast," agreed.

"Until I know for sure that every hydrant in town can fight a fully-engaged fire, I'm not sure that I should even be taking a shower," Sandblom said. "I recommend that a $500 fine be slapped onto anyone found violating the water ban for the second time, and a $1000 fine charged for the third offense. A fine of something like $25 isn't going to mean anything to people who live in this town."

Water commissioner Fred Koed explained that, under state law, Cohasset cannot fine those who violate the current water restrictions, which ask residents not to water their lawns between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.

"We can only do that during a state of emergency," Koed said. "As it stands right now, water levels keep fluctuating between what is normal and what constitutes a state of emergency.

Selectmen and water commissioners will meet with Town Counsel Richard A. Henderson at 8 p.m., tonight to discuss the possibility of levying fines for water ban violators.

Robert V. Davenport of 135 Sohier Street said, however, that placing fines on water restriction violations is entirely possible if the town files each violation as a criminal complaint with Quincy District Court. As part of this measure, Davenport recommended that first offenders be fined $200, a suggestion that alarmed selectmen chairman Michael Sullivan.

"I think we need to think about this for a while before we impose such an excessive fine," Sullivan said. Selectmen, the water commission, and town council will consider the issue of fines in another joint meeting tonight, July 28, at 7:30 p.m.

That's not soon enough for Hartwell, who demanded action.

"Is this problem bigger than this town can handle?" Hartwell asked. "When I tell you people my problems and I get the answer that nothing can be done, and that I risk losing everything in a fire, I get frustrated."

Selectman and former water commissioner Peter J. Pratt agreed.

"The town's response has not measured up to the magnitude of this problem," Pratt said.

Other selectmen asked Pratt to elaborate.

"If there is something you know we can do, but that you feel we've chosen not to do to alleviate this situation, please tell us what it is," said Ja[illegible]. Goedecke. "If we can try something that we know will work, we'll do it."

Pratt responded that he had made several suggestions for possible solutions back in June that had not yet been investigated. He cited as an example the possibility of using 3000 feet of spare World War II Navy-issue steel water main to build an emergency over-the-ground pipeline along Forest Avenue from Heather to Old Coach Road and from the end of Old Coach Road to relieve homes as far as Rustic Drive. The project would require easements from at least two residents and the permission of the Hingham water commissioner.

"I'm not saying that the only possibility for a solution to the problems of residents in that area is a line along Forest Avenue," Pratt said. "But it is an appreciable undertaking, and anyone who's had any experience with the water distribution system knows that an eventual solution to the problem will look something like that."

Former water commissioner Ben Curley agreed.

"It would boost the whole area," Curley said. "Whatever you could get up there, I think, is going to help."

Goedecke recommended that the board look into the cost of such a plan. As of Tuesday, interim water department superintendent Steve Nelson put the cost of Pratt's proposal between $50,000 and $80,000, a figure Pratt admits is "too high."

"That's not the only alternative I think

Ice cream venture provides a cool lesson for college kids

But the frenzied race for cash for creamsicles remains the same.

James Yess and Ziad Haddad were counting on that when they decided to spend their summer peddling Push-ups and Nutty—Buddies.

But there is more to being the "ice cream man" than just renting a truck and stocking it with cases of ice cream. Before these two young Cohasset entrepreneurs could sell even one ice cream sandwich, town and state laws required them to apply for and obtain permits.

It sounds like a lot of trouble and Haddad said it was "but it was just procedure."

In addition to heading to Boston for a Massachusetts Peddlers Licence, Yess and Haddad had to obtain a summer permit from the Cohasset Board of Health to sell ice cream in town. According to Haddad, they were lucky to obtain the town permit.

"Someone else had the permit for the summer but wasn't going to be using it," said Haddad, who managed to have the permit transferred over to he and his partner.

And the board of health wasn't the only board these two would face off with this summer. Selectmen denied their request to sell sodas along with ice cream at Cohasset's Sandy Beach, saying that soda sales were reserved for the hotdog venders in that area.

Both Yess and Haddad were very disappointed by the board's decision.

"It's not a liquor license, it's just soda," said Yess who maintained "we'd be making a lot more money if we were selling it."

Haddad pointed out that they are permitted to sell soda in other areas but don't bother — soda sales are highest at the beach.

Another struggle Cohasset's ice cream men face this summer, is keeping their truck, which is more than 20 years old, running. To rent the truck it costs $260 each week and that's in addition to the $500 spent weekly on ice cream. Yess said the truck has broken down and over-heated several times and they have lost refrigeration as well. While the Brockton company, from whom they rent will cover repairs, it doesn't make up for the lost days.

And every sunny, hot summer day counts.

"When it's raining, you just work to break even," said Haddad, who noted "you have to sell about $80 in ice cream to do so."

After a morning trip into Brockton to pick up the ice cream, Yess and Haddad hit the road at about 12:30 p.m. and spend most of their day at the beach and the town pool. When they do cruise the neighborhoods, you might find them on Beechwood Street, said Yess, but the beach and the pool are the most lucrative spots in town. Haddad added: "Cohasset kids are well behaved, nice kids."

Cohasset college students Ziad Haddad and James Yess are trying their hand at ice cream sales this summer in town. It's provided both a lesson in entrepreneurship and government bureaucracy.
(Alice Coyle photo)

Selling in Quincy was a different story said Haddad, who decided it was better to stick to Cohasset for the summer.

"We were kicked off little league fields and got several tickets," he recalled. "We made only half as much in Quincy as we make here."

Another out-of-town venture to supplement their ice cream income, was watering lawns in Hingham. Summer water restrictions quickly put them out of that business said Haddad, who noted the irony of having two summer jobs that depend on weather.

"If it rained you couldn't do either one," he said.

Still Haddad noted about the ice cream business: "It's a pretty good job overall — it's relaxing and you're at the beach."

If the weather is good, the job can pay up to $10 an hour and $500 each week, he said, but the money has to be divided in two. Haddad recommends going solo on an ice cream venture to really make money.

"Alone, you could work six hours a day and make over $300 each week."

Yess suggests getting the permits early.

"Depending on how things go — and if the truck is still running," Yess said they'll stay in business until mid-August, when they'll be heading back to Holy Cross.

Yess, who is a biology major said he'll look into an internship next year and Haddad, a psychology major, said he won't be pushing popsicles next summer either.

ute do what they're supposed to do," he said.

Laggrotteria, who lives in North Cohasset and has Hingham water, said "nonetheless my tax dollars have supported the water department for years and continue to do so. In a sense, I have more to lose through inefficiency from a service I will never have use of and therefore am more concerned than other townspeople."

Robert Kasameyer, 17 Pond St., is a management consultant providing corporate development and restructuring support for technology-based companies through his own company REK Associates.

"I go into troubled companies and sort out what the real problems are," Kasameyer said. "I determine what makes sense and develop an action plan to solve the problem."

Kasameyer, who has lived in town 16 years, said he became concerned about the town's water problems after reading the newspapers.

"I'd like to have the problem solved and think I can be of some use in solving it," he said.

Paul J. Laugelle, 96 Pleasant St., is a full-time Cohasset police officer and has water installation experience as owner of his own excavation contracting company.

The Cohasset native said he'd like "to take the gloves off, get my hands dirty and get some work done."

Mark Bell, 460 King St., ran against Fred Koed for an open seat on the board of water commissioners last spring. He is a member of the watershed protection committee and is chairman of the Title 5 transition study committee. He is employed as a senior audio/video technician in Boston University's Technical Operations Department.

Bell noted that the past has come back to haunt the town.

"The distribution problems theorized in the SEA report of 1980 are happening now," he said.

All four candidates said they would be open to running for reelection in the spring and agreed the water department is in debt to the general fund and should pay its deficit back to the town.

Town seeks water distribution solutions

the town should look at, though," said Pratt. "I think the town should rebuild inoperative booster pumps. I think the town should analyze using temporary mains to replace ones that are currently impacted. We have to remember our mission—to see to it that people are no longer running out of water during these very hot spells."

In other business, selectmen and commissioner Koed agreed to leave the question of hiring either a new superintendent or an outside organization to manage the town's water supply until officials have received a number of bids from interested parties in both camps.

"I believe that when we're making a decision of this magnitude, we ought to have all the facts on the table," said Koed. "We don't have all the facts right now. If we had three bids from three organizations, and three resumes from three individuals, we could take a better look. I'd rather not do this by seat-of-the-pants judgement."

Koed also provided a progress report on his agency's efforts to replace scores of the town's aging or inactive water meters.

"I'm in the process of creating a database," said Koed. "So far we've compiled 200 accounts that the office considers to be a potential problem. We're still collecting data."

Hope that everyone by now knows of the 83 volunteers that worked their magic in Appalachia last month. Not only did they build everything imaginable, they made some fast friends while they were there.

Among the awesome feats they accomplished, they helped rebuild a home for a young widowed mother of two sons (six and nine years old) who had no insurance to cover their loss (everything).

Judy Ritts is organizing help for her from here, beginning last week with a huge, church-wide yard sale. She is also looking for things they need to live in their rebuilt home, and donations to supplement the money raised at the sale to get a rental truck to deliver the household items. Help Judy to help this family, call her and see what you can do.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey H. Brown

Brown/Holmes

Laurie Elizabeth Holmes of Hyannis, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Holmes Sr., married Jeffrey Harold Brown of Beechwood Street, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Merle Brown June 4 at Union Chapel in Hyannis port. The Rev. Edward Atkinson of the First Parish Church in Cohasset officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Elizabeth Maloney of Washington, D.C. was maid of honor. Joanne Holmes, sister of the bride, of South Dennis and Marcy Brown, sister of the groom of Brighton were bridesmaids.

Merle Brown, father of the bridegroom, of Cohasset, served as best man. Ushers were Thomas Holmes Jr., brother of the bride, of Hyannis and Sean Nagle, cousin of the bridegroom, of Valencia, Calif.

Nicole Laliberte of Hyannis was flower girl. Ring bearer was Michael Hurtt, cousin of the bride, of Hyannis.

Jennifer MacAllister of Centerville was the soloist.

A reception was held at the Tara Hyannis Hotel.

The bride is a graduate of Barnstable High School and the University of New Hampshire. She will complete nursing school at the University of Guam. She works as a residential counselor for Community Systems Inc. in Cotuit.

The bridegroom is a graduate of Cohasset High School and attended Old Dominion College in Virginia. He is a 1st Class Petty Officer in the US Navy assigned to the USS Holland, Apra Harbor, Guam.

After a wedding trip to Bali in August, the couple will live in Guam for two years.

Tolini/Hoeker

Mrs. Patricia B. Tolini of Cohasset and Joseph A. Tolini of Scituate announce the engagement of their daughter Patricia Ann Tolini to Adam Paul Hoeker, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul G. Hoeker of Gilford, N.H.

The bride-to-be is a 1991 graduate of Cohasset High School and is a senior, majoring in psychology at Keene State College in Keene, N.H.

Her fiancé is a 1991 graduate of St. Anthony's High School in South Huntington, N.Y. He is doing a senior internship in Moutier, Switzerland. Upon his return, he will graduate from the University of New Hampshire.

A spring 1996 wedding is being planned.

Stepping up to the plate

What do John T. Wilson, Jr., James Ward, Don Trisler, and Stephen E. Daly have in common?

They are all Cohasset residents who recently applied for vacancies on town committees and were not appointed.

They met the necessary qualifications and were interviewed by selectmen — but they didn't get the nod for one simple reason: others applied too.

Over the past two months, selectmen have had the task of choosing among several applicants to fill seats on boards which fall under their jurisdiction.

For example, two excellent candidates applied for one seat on the Council on Aging and ten applied for five openings on the Hagerty committee! And just this week, three applied for one seat on the computer study committee.

It may seem like an unenviable job to choose among eager citizens who are lining up to serve the town they care about.

Although the interviews are brief, they provide an opportunity for selectmen to see what fine talent Cohasset has to offer and give applicants a chance to sit on "the hot seat" complete with TV camera and reporters to chronicle the event. Applicants also get the opportunity to see firsthand how their town's CEOs — who are also volunteers — go about their job.

No government can succeed without interested citizens who aren't afraid to get involved even if when they throw their hat into the ring — it's thrown back temporarily.

Tonight selectmen and water commissioners will jointly pick just one candidate among four who applied for a vacancy on the water commission. We were impressed with the sincere desire that candidates James W. Lagrotteria, Robert Kasameyer, Paul J. Laugelle, and Mark Bell have to serve the town as a member of this board which is faced with the huge task of solving the town's water problems.

We hope that Cohasset residents will continue not to be shy about stepping up to the plate to offer their energy and expertise to help the town out.

By the way, Cohasset still needs enthusiastic souls to fill the new E-911 committee, which will look at how best to handle the dispatch duties with the new emergency telephone system which should be available in town within a year. A seat on the cemetery committee is up for grabs. This board is searching for answers to the town's lack of burial space. And if mosquitos are the bane of your summer existence, how about joining the mosquito control board? This group has lots of creative ideas about how to get a handle on the pesky insects over the long and short term.

Call or stop by the town clerk's or selectmen's office for more information. Both offices have applications forms on which interested citizens can prioritize areas that interest them.

Greenbush rail's return opposed

To the Editor:

My wife and I live in the town of Cohasset and would like to express our thoughts concerning the train line the MBTA is attempting to activate. It is being argued that the train will provide an answer to the transportation problem to and from Boston. We do not believe the numbers prove this theory.

In fact we believe the activation of the line would only create more problems, not related to transportation, but rather environmental issues, accidental deaths and the destruction of some well balanced societies established on the South Shore.

The majority of the line going through Cohasset lies on waterlands. The potential of polluting those waters with the existence of a train is extremely high. Noise pollution is another issue.

The deaths caused by accidents at train intersections has stirred the media to communicate this issue and the Federal Government has been spending millions eliminating dangerous intersections.

Towns like Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate are close-knit family societies that have managed to maintain the balance because of their location and distance from the expressway. We believe the opening of the line would disrupt this balance through over population and urbanization of small villages like Cohasset.

The current line lies directly behind our house, which brings it close to home for us; however directly behind the line is a bird sanctuary consisting of a pond and woods. The ones who would be hurt the most are the birds and other animals who have always been unable to voice their concerns. Let's protect those lands that have always belonged to them and keep some peace in New England's country areas.

We are against the activation of the line and believe it is only a ploy for the MBTA to expand at the least cost to create the highest profit. Please help us communicate our concerns as well as those of nature.

Thanks to all for a great day

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Recreation Department would like to extend their most sincere gratitude to the Cohasset Police Department, Chief Brian Noonan and Safety Officer Cliff Jones for "Playground Police Awareness Day," Tuesday, July 19, at Deer Hill School.

Officers from the Cohasset Police Department as well as state and county officers showed the playground children a variety of police techniques and equipment. Cohasset Animal Control Officer Bill Quigley was on hand, as were members of the state police K-9 unit.

The morning-long activities culminated with a cookout for the children which was sponsored by the police officers.

Many thanks to all for a great time and information day.

Softball benefit was a success

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Permanent Firefighters wish to express a sincere thanks to all who have generously donated to the success of our softball game. It gives us a warm feeling to know that we have so many friends who helped to support our many causes.

The contributions our organization received will allow us to continue to support Cohasset Little League; a scholarship for a graduating senior from Cohasset High School; Cohasset Senior Citizens; and other charitable organizations.

In closing, on behalf of the fire department, we would like to thank everyone connected with this charitable event.

Appalachia service project makes a difference

By Ami Argus and Carol Martin
Special to the Mariner

Some Cohasseters make a difference by helping to construct a home for an impoverished Appalachian family through the Appalachia Service Project.

At 6 a.m. Saturday, June 25, 60 high school and college students along with 24 adult advisors from Cohasset boarded three buses in St. Anthony's parking lot to begin a week-long journey to the mountains of Virginia. These young people were part of a force of more than 7,000 volunteers who gave up a week of their summer to repair over 350 dwellings for the Appalachia Service Project (ASP) in 14 centers scattered across four states (Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and West Virginia).

ASP's mission is to provide adequate shelter for impoverished rural Appalachians; making homes safer, drier, and warmer. Although ASP was founded in Tennessee by a Methodist minister, the Rev. Glenn Evans, its volunteers come from all over the country and represent a variety of religious affiliations. Our Cohasset youth went to three separate counties in the western corner of Virginia and were joined at these centers by young people from as far away as Texas and Minnesota.

The commitment to ASP begins long before our workers arrive at their sites in Appalachia. Since last April, students and advisors have participated in workshops designed to teach them about Appalachian culture, to encourage an openness and understanding of the people of the Appalachian region, and to develop basic home repair skills. Fundraising is also an important task, as the participants must raise approximately $35,000 to make the trip possible. ASP relies heavily on the donations from the participating crews to cover the cost of supplies used on their repair projects and to cover the expenses of housing and feeding the workers at local schools or churches. Our youth raised money through fund-raisers as varied as car washes and pie baking, from contributions from individuals, local churches and the Rotary, and the selling of ASP stock.

This is the seventh year that Cohasset has participated in Appalachia Service Project. The Rev. Gary Ritts and his wife Judy introduced the community to the project when they first arrived in 1987. What began as a group of seven volunteers (one work crew), has grown to a total this year of 12 work crews at three different centers in Buchanan, Tazewell, and Wise counties, Virginia. Although Rev. Ritts is the minister at Second Congregational Church, the ASP group is truly ecumenical in scope. Participants represent almost every church in the community as well as neighboring towns. This year our crews worked on a variety of projects, from repairing a roof, building a deck, replacing windows, siding, sheet rocking and spackling, to building a foot bridge, and replacing a floor. Two crews worked together to begin a new home for a young family displaced by a house fire. In addition to a busy week at their respective sites, our youth are enriched and rewarded by the friendships they form with each other, as well as the volunteers from other parts of the country and the deep bonds formed with the families they serve in Appalachia.

This has been a tremendous year for everyone who participated. The warm feeling continues to embrace all of us. Thanks to everyone who supported us financially and emotionally; you helped make this trip a reality.

Hope and love

I found it amazing about the fact of how one may become so attached to those around him or her. Wednesday, I way sure that I would not be upset leaving, but yesterday I proved myself very wrong. As we were leaving the worksite, I found tears running down my cheeks in sorrow for leaving. I found myself wishing I could bring the families with me back to Cohasset. I knew that this was impossible so I comforted myself with the fact that although we may not be in Appalachia physically, mentally we would always be with the people. We brought them hope and love. Where there was darkness we showed them the light. Likewise, I learned that they did the same for us. The memories we gave to them will never dissolve from their hearts and minds as will the memories they bestowed on us will never become faint in our souls. I love the people of Appalachia and I will definitely return.

ASP Cohasset Volunteer

Hope for tomorrow

I don't know what to say
But that I'll think about you each day.
I discovered a new Love
Which reaches beyond and above.
The twinkle in your eyes and glow on your faces
Gives new hope for tomorrow and all its new places.
Justice seems scarce as I glance at your home
And then I recall who's the privileged one.
The one whose family is just a yell away
And who dreams of peace for the new day.
Their lives lie in simplicities
Rid of material complexities.
And with new hopes and chances
Who knows what tomorrow enhances.
So to all of the lives which have touched
Peace and Justice lie ahead and will change oh, so much.

Thanks for benefit yard sale success

To the Editor:

This past weekend, I was fortunate to be involved in a benefit yard sale. The proceeds are to help a family who lost everything in a house fire this year. Two of our work crews to Appalachia got to know this family because they were involved in rebuilding her house. But when these crews left, they knew something more had to be done because the family didn't have insurance and didn't have means to furnish their new home.

This experience was phenomenal as I witnessed the entire community come out to support this family. Individuals donated items to be sold at the yard sale along with furniture, appliances, clothing, linens, and toys to be brought to the family. Many individuals who did not have items to donate, contributed financially. In addition, many Cohasset businesses contributed items for our silent auction and items to be brought to the family. And I don't want to forget all the individuals who helped set up, staff, and clean up during the weekend, giving of their time which is so precious.

So often we get caught up in our own individual lives and forget that we are part of a community of people who are willing to help in any way we can. This weekend opened my eyes a little wider to see the love and support people have when someone is in need. I feel like I was part of a miracle; a wonderful magical miracle. Thanks to everyone for making this miracle happen.

Help is appreciated

To the Editor:

We would like to thank Mary Ford and everyone at The Cohasset Mariner for communicating clearly how dangerous rabies is and how careful we all need to be.

Our selectman Michael Sullivan, as well as the Cohasset Police, deserve a lot of credit for all they do for the town. We are very grateful for the help they gave us with what was a frightening experience for our household.

Hagerty exhibit offers a slice of Cohasset history

By Judith Brennan
Mariner correspondent

Those of you who are looking for great summer entertainment treat yourselves to a visit to the Cohasset Maritime Museum on Elm St. in Cohasset.

The town is rich with our nation's history, and the museum is a treasure trove of seafaring records and memorabilia.

It is currently featuring an exhibit reflecting the history of the Hagerty Company of Cohasset which for many years was located on Parker Ave. adjacent to the harbor. Due to the generosity of Mary Hagerty, Francis Hagerty's widow, it is the museum's only complete 20th century archival history of a Cohasset industry.

The company was founded by Francis Willard Hagerty in 1938, a natural result of a long and affectionate association with the sea and construction of wooden boats. As a boy he spent his summers with his family in Scituate, and he would bicycle over to Parker Ave. so that he could help John Eltman, a well-known local boat builder, in his shop. Hagerty's love for boats and the sea led to a degree from MIT in naval architecture in 1936.

When Eltman died, Fran Hagerty's mother purchased the boat builder's property to help settle the estate. So in 1938, the Hagerty Company of Cohasset was formed.

Hagerty was building rowing shells constructed out of light-weight bonded plywood for schools such as

Down to the Seas

The Friends of the Cohasset Library present an exhibit by local artists, July 15 through Sept. 15. The collection contains nautical images and local scenes by South Shore Art Center's gallery artists Janet Balgdon, Kerstin MacNeill, Dianne Panarelli Miller, A.M. Murphy and Jean Simms.

The Puzzle Club continues Monday and Tuesday evenings with Mrs. Murphy. This popular activity involves group puzzle and mystery solutions.

Library summer hours are Monday and Tuesday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Thursday and Friday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Wednesday and Sunday closed.

New CDROM service

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Cohasset, has two new CDROM services ready for public use. The products are SIRS RESEARCHER and SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER.

The computer workstation and the two CDROM services are on loan for the summer from the Cohasset High School.

Each CDROM can hold nearly 190,000 pages of text.

SIRS (Social Issues Resources Series) RESEARCHER provides full text of thousands of articles selected from over 800 sources from 1988 to the present. These articles relate to the sciences, social issues, global events, historic, economic and political information.

SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER gives full text of selected articles from publications of federal government departments, agencies and commissions. It also includes a congressional directory, with information on U.S. Senate and House members and their staffs.

Both files are searchable by key word, or by subject category, or by names of persons or agencies. Summaries of articles or the articles may be read on screen or printed.

Maritime Museum is opem

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum is open until Sept. 30, each afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., except Mondays. Admission is free to the public, and donations are welcomed. The Maritime Museum, an 18th century ship's chandlery, holds collections of artifacts, models, documents and pictures relating to Cohasset's history as a New England maritime town, featuring the 19th century fishing, shipbuilding, shipwrecks, lifesaving and mercantile trade. There is also a general collection of historical artifacts from early Cohasset.

A special exhibit this summer features photographs and artifacts illustrating the history of one of Cohasset's major local industries active from the 1930s to the 1990s at Cohasset Harbor, Hagerty Co., known also as "Cohasset Colonials." Items relating to the early years of the company, dating from its boatbuilding years of the 1930s and 1940s, and its wartime defense work during World War II will be shown in this unusual exhibit excerpted from company archives now owned by the Historical Society.

The society's phone number is 383-1434.

Exhibit offers a slice of Cohasset history

MIT and Annapolis when World War II broke out. At the time these light-weight shells revolutionized competitive rowing.

But the war effort would place different demands and strains on the fledgling company. In collaboration with Ratheon, and using his considerable engineering skills, Hagerty helped design a parabolic reflector to go atop Navy PT Boats and high-speed Motor Torpedo Boats used largely in the Pacific. Plywood domes looking much like acorns and set on top of wooden tripod masts, housed the radar units while protecting them against weather. They made hundreds of them for the government during the war and that's really when the company got started.

When the war finally came to an end, and like scores of other Americans who had given years to the war effort, the Hagertys needed something to do. In those early post-war years, Fran made eight-ft. skiffs and sailboats, most notably the 23-ft. International 110-Class racing sailboats for Raymond Hunt. But he still wasn't quite satisfied. He wanted to make something more people would want or need. As a newlywed, Mary looked around their large, sparsely furnished home and offed, "Why don't you make furniture?"

Inspired with the idea, a love of working with wood, and an eye for excellent design and craftsmanship, he began researching the highest quality authentic antique reproductions. With the help of the Museum of Fine Arts curator at the time, Mr. Hitkis, who actually moved some of the museum's pieces upstairs to his private office where they could be better studied for accuracy of design, and with the restriction that no piece would be sold as authentic, copies of detailed designs were completed.

These furniture kits came on the market at a time when more people seemed to take pride in something they themselves had made. It might have taken a year to finish a piece, but when completed there was appreciation and joy in the endeavor, the reason Hagerty pieces are in so many homes today.

"Only with the support of honest and fine craftsmen here and throughout New England was Cohasset Colonials able to become the success it did," said Mary Hagerty.

You have the rest of the summer to explore this fine little museum and unique display. Allow David Wadsworth, the curator, to take you on an odyssey into the town's historic past weaving it into today's world. He welcomes questions as well as interesting anecdotes out of the past.

You may want to make a day of it and catch the Historical Society show at the Cohasset Art Center. A central display piece is a replica of the brig St. John which went down off Grampas Ledge in 1849, resulting in the drowning of 99 Irish immigrants. This beautiful model was donated to the society by Mary Hagerty and was refurbished by John Hartshorne. It has a special place in Mary's heart as it was so dear to her husband because the story so touched him.

The museum's summer hours are from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday.

Seeds of senior community sprout in new garden

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

Cohasset's Council on Aging has produced a number of successful programs tailored to the needs of elder community members throughout its history.

Never before, however, has it produced zucchini.

"We've had the most success with the zucchini," said Pat Ryan, coordinator of Cohasset's new community garden on North Main Street. "It's been just great. The winter squash is coming along well, too."

The idea for the new garden germinated following a study sponsored by the Council on Aging investigating the needs and interests of Cohasset's older men.

"It came about as part of a statewide concern that men 60 years and older are not having their needs met within the community," said Ryan, who added that older women tend to socialize more.

A survey conducted as part of the Council's study suggested gardening as a popular interest that might involve more older men with other members of their community.

"We're trying to provide many different outlets now to produce a sense of community for these men," said Council on Aging head Kathy Bryanton. "We have a men's breakfast club, organized by Dr. Win Merrill, where older men meet to eat together once a week. The SHARE food distribution program involves 25 men who help us bring food to up to 60 families. The community garden—developed because of a great interest those surveyed expressed in gardening—is part of the solution to a much larger issue."

Requiring little in the way of finances to get going, the garden quickly attracted the attention of many interested in helping it get off the ground.

"The garden is located on town land, but we would have been out of business without the help of next-door neighbor Arthur Lehr, who lets us use his water," said Ryan. "Tony Finegan and his son rototilled the area for us, and Ashley Johnson and Connie Jones staked out where we wanted the garden to be. Then we recruited Jack Hubbard, who's a great gardener with many years of experience. Before long Nancy Snowdale was picking the first zucchini."

Pat Ryan, Nancy Snowdale, Gerard Keating, and Jack Hubbard show off some of the zucchini and other squash grown in the new community garden off North Main St. For more information, please call the Senior Center at 383-9112.

Besides the ubiquitous zucchini, the community garden currently grows tomatoes, peppers, onions, peas, squash, carrots, beans, and watermelon, with a few wandering cucumber plants thrown in to taste. The fledgling garden comes up to even Hubbard's high standards, despite the obvious problems posed by Cohasset's lack of reliable water.

"There's been some suffering," said Hubbard. "We'd like to water more. But we'll stick by the town's regulations."

Snowdale added that the gardeners have also killed their first skunk, out of fear that the ordinarily helpful animal might have carried rabies.

Other than that, said first-time gardener Gerard Keating, the project has been a breeze.

"It doesn't take much," said Keating. "A little weeding, spreading grass around and then you pick the whoosies once they come up."

Produce from the garden will go to the community food pantry, the Council on Aging's food site, and the gardeners themselves. Anyone willing to help out in the garden for any length of time can share in the rewards of gardening, only some of which are the fruits and vegetables produced.

The garden's success, however, does not mean that Council members are not still seeking ways to bring together members of Cohasset's older male population. This concern—how to address the needs of older men in the community—is not limited to Cohasset, but have been the subject of state and even national attention, receiving particular notice at the recent nationwide council of governors.

"Frank Olivier, the secretary of the state's commission on elder affairs will be presenting the findings of the governors' council, along with several members of Governor Weld's cabinet, on August 11," said Bryanton. "Locally, we're more than happy to look into any suggestions people want to make to us. Right now we have a bowling program, and computer classes, and we're hoping to set up a chess club and a book discussion group."

The garden, Bryanton feels, is a beginning.

"There has been a lot of interest from people in the community," she said. "It's a great way for older men to see themselves as competent. It's something that everyone can feel a part of—whether they're watering or planting or weeding, everyone has something to add."

WANTED — VOLUNTEERS! RSVP

Many volunteer opportunities are available for those who wish to join the Council on Aging volunteer program. Day and time is flexible. We need drivers for the senior shuttle, or for medical appointments. You drive three hours just one day a month.

Kitchen helpers — The COA is also in need of kitchen help for its Tuesday and Thursday lunch programs. Volunteers serve food and drinks and help with set-up and clean-up. The lunches are fun, informal and a great way to meet new people.

If you enjoy outside gardening — please sign up for working on the community garden. Pat Ryan is in need of people who can water the garden, weed or just make sure the bugs stay off the plants. Call 383-9112 if you have a green thumb or want to develop one.

SUMMER FUN ACTIVITIES

Tuesday and Thursday, water aerobics, 11:30 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. with instructor Ginny Waterman. $2 per class, held at town swim center.

Benefits of water aerobics/walking:

* gets or keeps exerciser in shape
* aids recovery from accidents and sickness
* combats aging process
* social — meet and be with other people
* stress release.

O.J.'s trading cards generating mixed interest on South Shore

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Elliot Goldberg, the owner of the newest sports cards shop on the South Shore, Pasttimes in Cohasset, never really gave much thought to stocking up on former Buffalo Bills' Hall of Famer O.J. Simpson's trading cards.

Even after Simpson was arrested and charged with the June 12, double murders of his ex-wife Nicole Simpson and her friend, Ron Goldman, Goldberg felt no desperate desire in obtaining Simpson's cards. In fact, he shyed away from the products.

Goldberg, however, does have 15 of Simpson's cards from his days with the Bills. He explained he didn't go out of his way to find Simpson's cards, but happened to run into a card dealer at a recent show who was selling the cards at a dirt-cheap price.

Goldberg has found the inquiries about the cards coming mainly from people who know very little about collecting and dealing. "It's people who don't collect cards who want the O.J. Simpson cards," he explained as customers browsed his fully-stocked store on Route 3A. "I'm not their conscious or their voice of reason.

"I have them because enough people asked for them. That's the only reason I carry them."

Goldberg told himself if he was going to carry Simpson's cards he'd make it a point not to display them prominently in his shop. Instead, they're in the glass cases along with the wide array of baseball, basketball, hockey and other football cards.

Simpson's cards have become one of the most sought after items within the business after years of average sales. Along the South Shore, though, the interest in the cards has fluctuated from store to store.

Several sports card shop owners have been swamped with phone calls from people hoping to get their hands on a Simpson card, whether it be his rookie card, which has been selling for upward of four times its $125 value, or cards from other years throughout his Hall of Fame career. Other shop owners have reported the fervor for Simpson's collectibles is just not there.

Now there is a brand new set of cards and comic books on the market that all local shop owners interviewed are avoiding altogether. The set, which can be ordered from Kool World Collectibles of North Smithfield, Rhode Island, advertise "trading cards highlighting one of the most celebrated murder cases in history," and deals with the murders, the infamous Bronco chase and the cast of pivotal characters in the case. The 10-card promotional set retails at $7.95 and the 50-card factory set is $14.95.

"I won't carry them because that's sort of symptomatic of society today and how everything is pumped up," Goldberg said of the non-sport Simpson cards. "I don't need to carry that merchandise."

Goldberg's comments echoed that of nearly every other dealer interviewed on the South Shore.

"It's a little unethical but everyone's out to make a quick buck," said Jeff Backus, the owner of The Dugout sports cards store in Holbrook.

Backus, in fact, hasn't been carrying football cards for quite a few years now. That hasn't stopped people from calling his store, inquiring about any Simpson football cards he might have for sale. Backus said he has received more than 20 calls from potential buyers but has had to turn them away.

Simpson's arrest put a dent in Dave Scolameiro's plan to add to the dozens of autographed cards and glossies he has at his shop, Shortstop Collectibles in Weymouth's Columbian Square.

Scolameiro planned to order O.J. Simpson football cards to be autographed at a scheduled sports cards show Simpson was to be featured at on July 1, in Pasadena, California. Scolameiro, who has been dealing cards for 35 years, quickly cancelled his order when it became obvious Simpson would be spending time in jail, huddling with his team of high-priced lawyers, not at a card show signing autographs.

Since Simpson's arrest and subsequent hearings there have been rumblings in the sports cards industry. Stories surfaced that collectors have been buying his rookie card for as much as $500.

At local shows throughout the South Shore, Simpson paraphernalia, including cards, autographed glossies and magazine covers with his photo, have been on several tables.

Scolameiro said there has been "a little bit of interest" in Simpson's football cards from over the years, but it has been mainly from people going into his store in an attempt to sell him cards from their own collections.

Scolameiro believes any card company worth its salt wouldn't consider coming out with the non-sport Simpson cards.

"Will the major companies produce an O.J. Simpson card like that, I don't think so," said Scolameiro who had serious questions as to whether or not the cards were licensed.

At Norwell's Sport 'N Cut, it has been business as usual, according to shop owner Joseph DiCarlo. DiCarlo raised the price of his lone O.J. rookie from $125 to a modest $250, but said "nobody bothered to inquire.

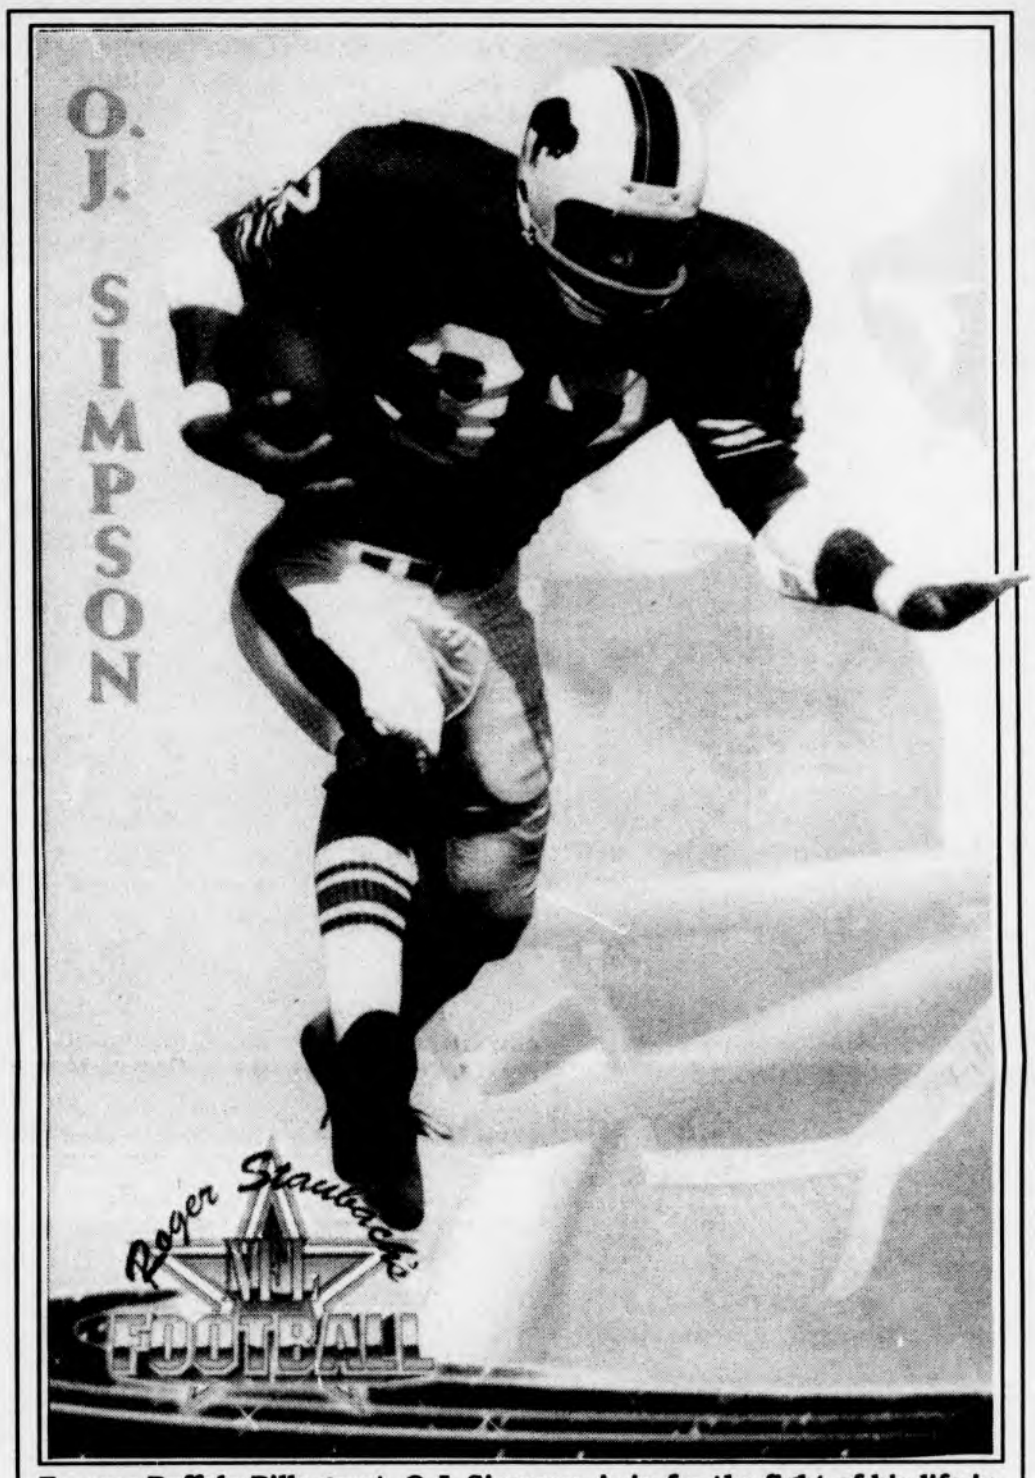
"It's (sale of Simpson's cards) very small," he said, "just like before."

Like Scolameiro, DiCarlo has also heard dealers were asking for upward of $500 for the rookie card in certain regions of the country, but was highly skeptical as to whether or not the stories were exaggerated.

"Some people within the business say things to stimulate business," DiCarlo pointed out.

He has seen a surplus of Simpson cards at the shows he attends on

(See page 19)



Former Buffalo Bills great, O.J. Simpson, is in for the fight of his life in proving his innocence in the double murders of his ex-wife and her friend. Although Simpson's football cards have increased in popularity across the country, interest along the South Shore has been lukewarm.

When the sun beats down and the humidity melts your brain, there's one place for the relief - the beach.

The following is a guide to having fun on the many wonderful beaches of the South Shore.

Tanning tips

Sun screen is your friend. Cover exposed skin like you're basting chicken wings on a barbecue grill.

(I prefer Cajun-style sun screen.)

Remember, there's nothing less attractive than sun blisters and tumors on your face.

I recommend using at least eight or ten for prolonged exposure under the sun.

However, some of the higher number sun screens have the consistency of Elmer's glue.

Spread evenly or you will look a Pringle covered with onion dip.

Shark attacks

Sharks are on the loose and they are looking for a few light summer snacks.

Over the weekend, a Basking Shark was spotted in the waters of Hull and Marshfield.

While Basking Sharks do not attack humans, I don't want to wave any of my appendages near this creature.

Plus this shark might head out to sea and tell a few of his cousins about the Speedo Buffet he saw along the shore.

My advice: If you see a big shark fin in the water, don't pull a Jacques Cousteau, get the heck out of the water.

Let Chief Brody deal with the shark.

Fun and Games

If you bring a Frisbee to the beach know how to use it.

I don't know how many times I've seen a Frisbee hook into an unsuspecting crowd.

And believe me, there's nothing more painful than having a Wham-O thud off the side of your skull while you're closing your eyes and thinking of Pamela Anderson.

Another beach activity is playing fetch with your dog.

I recommend playing in a deserted area where there are few swimmers.

"Spot" might get too excited after a couple tosses into the surf and climb over the back of a four-year old to get his tennis ball.

Be careful with your pooch or you could end up on the wrong side of a lawsuit.

Snacking

One of my favorite verbs, snacking is big business along the beaches.

Ice cream trucks, fried clam huts and burger joints are all conveniently nearby during peak swimming hours.

However, it is always best to eat healthy snacks like fruit instead of chowing down on onion rings and snow cones.

But if you must eat fried food and ice cream, eat them fast.

The sun will melt any ice cream in a matter of minutes.

As for fried food, seagulls will swoop down and snare your fish and chips before you can say "'Jonathan Livingston Seagull' was a crummy book."

Dealing with Lifeguards

Lifeguards have a tough job. It is not all sun screen and checking out the babes.

They have to watch the water for swimmers, boaters, sharks and jet skis while keeping their hair in place and their Ray Bans on.

However, one thing lifeguards don't do is baby-sit.

Many lifeguards told me about parents who just dropped their kids off at the beach and expected the Bay Watchers to baby-sit for a couple hours.

That isn't lifeguarding, that's day care.

Also it is not cool to ask female lifeguards to rub sunscreen on your back.

A friend of mine tried that once and the girl threatened to call David Hasselhoff.

Littering

Throwing things on the beach is a no-no.

In the good old days, people used to throw the pop-tops from their canned beverages right on the beach.

Numerous cuts and at least one Jimmy Buffet song lyric resulted.

("I blew out my flip-flop, stepped on a pop-top.")

However, people are more environmentally aware these days and it is better to walk the 20 yards to the rubbish barrel.

Shaking out your blanket

At some point, everyone has to leave the beach.

And this means shaking out the sand from your wet blanket.

If you want to be strangled to death by a mob simply stand up and shake your blanket like it's on fire.

Sand will fly everywhere and stick on sunscreen covered beach patrons.

They will shriek and then charge like a heard of elephants.

I recommend holding off shaking your blanket until you reach the parking lot.

You'll have to carry a soggy, sandy blanket for a while, but you will still have the precious gift of life.

—David McKee

O.J.'s trading cards...

Sundays. The autographed photos, DiCarlo believes, are mainly fakes, making them worthless.

As for the newest O.J. cards to hit the market, DiCarlo hasn't entertained the thought of ordering them. "Personally, I wouldn't even bother to put them in my store."

But as much as Hanover Baseball Cards owner Scott Chisholm disdains the new set, he admits they'll probably make a pretty penny. "Cards don't cost much to print," Chisholm said. "I think it's kind of sick, personally."

When news of Simpson's arrest first broke, people were going into Chisholm's store and asking him, mainly out of curiosity, if he had sold many of Simpson's cards. After a while they tailed off and the majority of O.J. questions came from serious dealers interested in buying or trading for his cards.

It made no difference to Chisholm. Like Backus, he doesn't stock any of Simpson's cards. "I didn't carry them before and I don't carry them now," Chisholm said. "A lot of the dealers I've seen who sell them are doing very well."

Chisholm and Chris Yourell, the owner of South Shore Sports Cards in Braintree, have their own theories as to why there has been a sudden interest in Simpson's cards now that he will stand trial for two counts of first-degree murder with special circumstances.

"Part of it is novelty and part of it is greed," Chisholm said. "The price is going up and everyone wants them."

Like many of the dealers who attend weekend card shows, Yourell has seen a fair share of the cards on various tables, but most of them are still there by the show's end.

"Everyone has them on their tables," he said. "I've heard stories that people are buying them, but I haven't seen it and I'm at all the shows."

Simpson hasn't been the only player in demand. Al Cowlings, a long-time friend of Simpson who drove the white Bronco in the, by now, infamous chase, has had his cards pop up at card shows.

Yourell said he wouldn't bother putting a Cowlings card in his glass cases. "I don't have any and I don't plan to have any," he said.

At J.B.'s Baseball Card Shop in Scituate, owner Joseph Bergman doesn't have any Simpson cards in stock and has received a small amount of interest.

And add Bergman to the list of collectors vetoing the new card series. He likens them to the Serial Killers set which contains cards depicting John Wayne Gacy, Charles Manson and Jeffrey Dahmer, among others.

"It's like those mass murder cards," Bergman said. "I wouldn't carry them. It seems like a cheap way to make a buck."

"Yech, Mr. Grillo! There's Greasy Dirt In My Kerman."
Believe me, it happens to everybody. It comes from heating and cooling systems, from air pollution, cooking and spilled food. Ignore it, and you run the risk of never being able to restore your rug's original bright colors. You may even attract textile insects! That's why Oriental rugs need professional cleaning every three to five years. We offer pick-up and delivery, or you can use our cash-and-carry service and save 25%. We also offer a free booklet filled with important information like this. I'm George Grillo, and we're at 100 Messina Drive, Braintree, 1-800-649-7707.

Good new on the diving controversy that arose during the meet against Scituate Yacht Club. At that time, diving coach Jane Delima refused to participate in the diving competition because she could not ensure the safety of our divers in Scituate Yacht Club's shallower pool. Scituate Yacht Club claimed 16 points for the diving competition, resulting in a victory by a narrow margin of 291 to Cohasset's 283.

A league meeting recently affirmed Coach Delima's decision, voiding the 16 points. The official score is now Cohasset 283 and Scituate Yacht Club 275. Cohasset extended an offer to hold the diving competition portion of the meet but Scituate Yacht Club refused, resulting in a victory for Cohasset. Cohasset is undefeated after three meets.

Cohasset's next meet will take place Friday, July 29, against the Scituate Kights of Columbus in Scituate.

Sixth carillon concert set

Joseph C. Davis, carillonneur of the Riverside Church in New York City, will give a recital in the continuing series of weekly concerts on the Cohasset Carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Sunday, July 31.

Davis' program will feature carillon compositions by James R. Lawson and Otto Luening, arrangements of hymn tunes, transcriptions for carillon from the works of Michael Aaron and Erik Satie, music from "The Wizard of Oz", and a selection of popular tunes.

Davis studied carillon with James R. Lawson in New York, and at the Netherlands Carillon School in Amersfoort, and in 1990 was appointed to succeed Mr. Lawson as carillonneur of the 74-bell Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Carillon at the Riverside Church (the world's largest carillon by weight). This past spring he was visiting assistant professor in linguistics at Boston College, and will teach in the fall at City College in New York.

The recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. It will take place rain or shine; in case of inclement weather, listen from your parked cars. Printed programs will be distributed on Cohasset Common and in the church courtyard on Highland Avenue. Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs and picnic suppers, and to join a tour of the tower and carillon following the recital.

For further information, call St. Stephen's Church at 617/383-1083, or the church carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner, at 508/475-2599, or the assistant carillonneur, Mary Kennedy, at 617/383-9599.

Common concert August 2

The 30-piece South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh will perform on Cohasset Common at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday Aug. 2, weather permitting. The public is welcome to attend the free recreation commission concerts made possible through the support and generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc.

Those attending should bring a lawn chair or blanket to sit on and insect repellant.

August workshops planned

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham will host a variety of workshops for children at 10 a.m. Tuesdays in Hingham and Thursdays in Cohasset during the month of August.

A chalk drawing contest for children age 6 and older is planned at the Hingham store August 2 and in Cohasset August 4.

Children age 5 and older can work with glitter art August 9 in Hingham and August 11 in Cohasset.

In Hingham on August 16 and Cohasset on August 18, children age 8 and older can be creative with beads.

Wood magnet painting will be offered in Hingham August 23 and Cohasset August 25 for children age 6 and older.

Story times continue for children 2 to 4 years old at 10 a.m. in both locations.

Kate Caldwell's read-aloud book group for 8 t year olds will continue to meet at 6:45 Wednesda Cohasset.

Flyers are available at both stores or call 7490-2665 or 383-2665 for information.

Register for performance

Registration for the performance of "Little Red Riding Hood" at the Music Circus will be held from 9 a.m. to noon and 5 to 7 p.m. Thursday July 28 at the town hall. Registration is open to children enrolled in the recreation department's playground program. Tickets are $5 per child.

Music Circus registrations will be held each Thursday through August 4 two weeks before the date of the performance.

Chowderfest contest set

A soup and chowderfest contest will be held from noon to 3 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 6, at the Bernie King Pavillion, Nantasket Avenue, Hull, opposite the Carousel.

The event is sponsored by the Nantasket Chamber of Commerce in celebration of Hull's 350th birthday.

Several of the South Shore's finest restaurants, including the Mill Wharf, will be participating.

The Hearing Center
Have You Heard?
by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist
SETTING LIMITS
"Sensorineural" hearing loss accounts for about 95 percent of all adult hearing disorders. It originates in the inner ear where the hair cells, which transmit sound to the brain, are destroyed due to aging or excessive exposure to noise. While there is little we can do about the effects of aging, we can limit our exposure to noise. How much is too much? Habitual exposure to noise above 85 dB (the noise level of truck traffic) causes gradual hearing loss in many individuals. Beyond that the higher the noise level, the less time is takes to do its damage. For instance, eight hours of exposure to noise at 85 dB (lawn mower) is the cutoff point at which the Occupational Safety and Health Administration requires hearing conservation programs to be implemented in noisy work environments.
At THE HEARING CENTER, we provide a pro-active approach to hearing conservation (i.e., protection from excessive/noises - Walkmans, concerts, etc.). However, if you do suffer from hearing loss, we can help you. We recognize that there are varied uses and needs for different types of hearing aids. We recommend and carry a variety of brands to enable us to select the one that has the features that best suit your individual needs. Please call us right away for an appointment. Our phone number is 1-800-339-9316. Our offices are conveniently located at 306 Washington St. (Rte. 53), Norwell, and 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3-A), Quincy.
P.S. It only takes one hour of 105 dB noise (motorcycle) to cause hearing loss.

Boat house could be moved

More harbor land may be up for grabs

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The Hagerty committee assigned a four-person subcommittee at its meeting last Thursday night to determine whether or not the proposed sale of the 2.6 acres of Figueiredo property adjacent to the Hagerty site is a serious offer.

And by the time it meets again on August 11, the committee also expects to have the exact cost in moving the antique boat house from the Hagerty property to Government Island, along with topographical details of the island.

Chairman Al Moore said the committee is still waiting for details to "construct a plan." He stressed the importance of getting the "hard numbers down" and securing an exact location for the boat house on the island if it is eventually re-situated.

The boat house is currently being used by the Cohasset Rowing Club under the direction of Jack Buckley. Buckley wants to renovate the boat house, built in the early 1860s, into a maritime institute which he would run. The estimated cost to restore the exterior of the structure is $3,600 in the form of grant money, while the $15,000 needed for work on the main structure and the interior would be covered by funds raised through public donations.

Buckley is the only person to come forward with an

A long time supporter of rail restoration to the South Shore, state Senator Brian McDonald, (D-Weymouth) successfully included a provision to the state transportation bill that will prevent the construction or design of any rail projects, until ground is broken for the restoration of the Old Colony Greenbush line.

Cohasset's carillon concerts are a Common occurrence

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

For 70 years the bells of St. Stephens have signaled the arrival of summer. Sunday they pealed merrily above the duck pond while Cohasset picnicked, sailed toy boats, tossed balloons aloft or otherwise frolicked on a perfect summer's eve.

Even the mama duck with her brood of three little ducklings stopped flexing her flight feathers and and glided across the pond in harmony with her feathered friends swimming in perfect time with Strauss's Wiener Blut.

For those who do not know, the carillon concerts are the oldest continuing annual carillon series in the North America and the carillon in St. Stephens' bell tower is truly something special.

"It is the largest carillon, by number of bells, in New England," assistant carillonneur Mary Kennedy said. "And it is considered one of the finest in the world."

So fine that carillonneurs come from all over for the joy of playing. Every Sunday from June 26 through August 28, St. Stephen's sponsors an hour-long carillon concert. This summer, carillonneurs are coming from Florida, Connecticut, Ohio, Washington, D. C., New York City, Tennessee, Scotland and Australia.

Rain or shine, they will make the bells of St. Stephen's sing. And in 1996, Cohasset will be the site of the annual Congress of the Guild of Carillonneurs of North America.

The 57 bells that form the carillon are hung stationary. Although they are bolted in place to a metal frame, their clappers move by means of wires, quadrants or roller bars and adjustable rods to the keyboard — or clavier — one floor below the belfry.

The keyboard consists of wooden levers and pedals. The carillonneur plays the levers with a cupped fist. Playing the keyboard can be a real surprise. While the

Shaw's hearing set

Representatives of Shaw's Supermarkets will meet with the zoning board of appeals at 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 4, to discuss expanding the highway business district by 200 feet at certain parcels abutting 739 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy.

The planning board will discuss the matter in time to make its recommendation to the zoning board.

Shaw's plans call for razing the three existing buildings at the 9.7-acre plaza on Route 3A and Beechwood Street and construct a 71,650-square-foot linear building at a cost of about $2 million.

To complete its project, Shaw's planned to acquire an additional 17.8 acres of land adjacent to the plaza to accommodate a new septic system.

A block of businesses in downtown North Scituate was in the dark this week after an electrical malfunction last Wednesday left the Gannett Road tenants without power.

"We've been without power since 3 o'clock Wednesday morning, when the storm knocked a pole out," said Eric Grundeman of Wilbur's North Ice Cream at 367 Gannett Road. "Eastern Edison was here within 30 minutes, but as it turned out the main line into the building burned up. They have to put in a whole new one."

Charlotte's Hair Salon owner Charlotte Phinney said that while the lack of power may have cost her shop customers, her employees have fortunately not wanted for work.

"Two salons have called to say that our stylists could work there until our troubles were over," Phinney said. "The whole experience has been very positive. While business has been way off—we have some hard conditions, with no hot water and nothing to do about this heat—the neighbors have been wonderful. There are some really nice people in this village, and they all pull together."

Others who lost electricity reported that, though the situation was more an annoyance than a crisis, they would be more than relieved once power was restored.

"It gets pretty gloomy in the late afternoon," said Continental Cable's Pat Sherman. "It has made things very inconvenient. The subscribers won't be affected, but we can't make coffee."

The outage did affect Cohasset viewers of Channel 3, however, which has featured nothing but snow. The selectmen's meeting was taped this week and will be shown at a later date.

Electricity returned around 2:50 p.m. Tuesday afternoon.

Resignation accepted

Selectmen accepted the resignation of Gerry Deveney from the cemetery study committee. In a letter to the board, Deveney said: "my reasons for resigning are personal and in no way should reflect upon the work of the committee, any town board or administrator."

He noted that sitting on the cemetery committee was his first experience on a town committee and that it was a pleasure to serve.

Anyone interested in serving on the cemetery committee, should call the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Brian Cogill to retire

Police Officer Brian Cogill will retire in Sept. 6 after 31 years of service.

In a memo to selectmen, Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said that Cogill is one of five remaining officers who qualify for sick leave buy-back under the union contract. Cogill has 120 sick days accumulated and will be due $17,365.20 upon his retirement.

Selectmen will request these funds in an article at the special town meeting this fall.

Sign correction requested

The Government Island Study Committee have asked selectmen to correct the sign at the entrance to Government Island.

The new sign regarding parking is neat and to the point however it neglects to use the official name of the parking lot which was named "The Edwin A. Young Memorial Parking Lot" by a unanimous voice vote at the April 7 session of the April 5, 1986 Town Meeting," said Chairman Hamilton T. Tewksbury.

"This committee feels this should be corrected so that Ed Young, who gave his services to the town so freely, will be properly remembered," Tewksbury said.

Limousine license OK'ed

Selectmen approved a license for John Chang, 441 King St., to operate a limousine service in town. The six-passenger, stretch limousine will be housed at 441 King Street.

The service will mainly be airport transport but may also be used for weddings and proms, Carol Chang said.

Carol Chang assured selectmen that their home is on a heavily wooded lot and the limousine would not be visible from the street.

Garber is interviewed

Selectmen interviewed Gary Garber, M.D. of Fairoaks Lane for a seat on the computer study committee. Garber, who has lived in town 10 years, is currently serving on the computer applications committee at the American College of Cardiology and has formed his own computer company ENTROPY.

Garber is the third candidate for an open seat on the computer study committee. Selectmen interviewed Monty Najjar and Michael Dick last week. They said they will reach a decision at their next meeting August 15.

Disease warning issued

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik warns residents that Coxsacki disease, a highly contagious virus named after the upstate New York town where it was first discovered, is especially prevalent in Cohasset this summer.

The so-called "foot and mouth" virus which mostly affects children takes many different strains. But symptoms usually include blisters in the mouth and less often on the feet, Godzik explained.

"It is generally a fairly unusual disease but this year we've seen an unusually large number of cases," he said.

Children should be encouraged to wash their hands after using the bathroom and to use strong personal hygiene. Secretions from blisters in the mouth are passed on to the gastrointestinal track, Godzik said.

Parents should not send an infected child to a birthday party or daycare center or other crowded activity, he said.

Eight periods squeezed in a secondary school day

By Sean Sweeney
Mariner correspondent

The Cohasset School Committee recently formally approved a change in the Junior/Senior High School schedule from seven daily periods to eight.

The change will result in academic periods being reduced in length by a few minutes in order to allow for the addition of one period each day. The change will not lengthen the school day.

The committee approved the plan, which has been in the works for a number of months, after much discussion at the board's two previous meetings.

In his recommendation, Supt. Stephen Hart stressed the positive academic effects that such a change will have.

"This does indicate to me a positive step forward. It is obvious to me that kids will be spending more time on academics," he said.

Committee members indicated their satisfaction and enthusiasm regarding the addition of lab periods to go along with many existing subjects. The only real concerns among the members of the committee surrounded the questions of whether the shortened period length would negatively impact subject matter covered over the school year and whether students would be more likely to select a second study period if they are unable to secure a place in a particular class.

Hart explained that early indications have shown that kids are actually increasing the number of academic selections and are not selecting multiple study periods. The committee will revisit the issue of subject matter covered at the end of the coming academic year in order to measure the impact of the shortened class lengths.

Committee member Ralph Kidder also expressed his desire to explore lengthening of the school year in the future to increase students' time on academics.

• In other business, Hart advised the committee of seven new staff appointments for the 1994-95 school year. According to Hart, Ruth Fennessey has been hired to fill a new position of curriculum coordinator for the elementary schools; Dayle Dickinson has been hired as a fifth grade teacher at the Deer Hill School; David Klapholz will teach physics at the high school and another three staff members were added to fill special education vacancies. Soshanah Starr will serve as a part-time special education teacher at the Osgood School; Lisa Leary and Joan Pahud have also been hired as special education aides for the Deer Hill School; and Christine Marsh has been hired as a kindergarten aide. According to Hart, there remain another four positions to fill.

The committee was deadlocked on a vote to approve requests for leaves of absences for two staff members. In committee member Jim Kirk's absence, the committee voted 2-2 on the requests and will reconsider the vote at a subsequent meeting when all five members are present.

The committee also announced that it will conduct its meetings for the 1994-1995 school year on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month.

County to aid town

The Norfolk County Commission will help Cohasset to survey the intersection of Forest Avenue, King and North Main Streets in Cohasset.

Selectmen had asked assistance of the county engineering department, and the commissioners agreed to provide the engineering assistance. Work will begin within the next few months.

interest in securing a lease agreement with the town for the use of the boat house. Russ Bonetti said different groups haven't been willing to do the same and suggested the committee's work had begun to stall.

"If we look into this building again let's make it the last time," he said. "We're taking one step forward and three steps back."

Sub-committee member Vee Roebuck said she is still looking into the $500,000 asking price for the Figueiredo property but has questions as to why the owners haven't pursued it more vigorously.

The property includes landing docks which generate $40,000. However, the permit for the docks is not built up to its maximum capacity, leaving room for the possible construction of an additional 36 dock spaces.

As he has in past meetings, committee member Herb Jason was adamant in reiterating his proposal that the boat house be moved back to Government Island where it was originally situated and the refurbishing be done.

"I look at the boat house as a very historical, valuable building," Jason said. "It doesn't look like that now. What we want to do is bring something in there people will want to see."

Jason went on to say better access to the water for boat storage should be made in the form of a ramp that leads to the edge of the water. Committee member Beth Christoffel said if the boat house were to become a maritime institute she would like to see some sort of exhibit on the history of Cohasset's lobster industry.

If moved, committee members agreed that the boat house be located on the water side of the property so it would placed on the state register.

The committee is responsible for determining what avenue to take with the boat house. Committee Clerk Ham Tewksbury said the cost in moving the structure ranges from a low figure of $6,500 to a high of $10,000.

"I sense there is an effort to save the building so it doesn't fall into a pile of rubbish," Moore said.

Private treasures on display this weekend

The South Shore Art Center plans to uncover a treasure trove Friday, Aug. 5. The jewels within consist of artwork from private collections.

The museum quality paintings, photographs, etchings and sculptures are on loan from South Shore residents. Some of the collectors have a long family tradition of art collecting, some are artists in their own right while others started collecting for no other reason than love for a particular piece of art. Twenty-two private collectors have generously shared the cream of their collections with the rest of the South Shore.

This collection spans the dimensions of time, tradition and taste: one collector loaned the center an Olmec doll created in the central-south region of Mexico nearly 3,000 years, another shares a wood engraving by Albrecht Durer. A series of photogravures on tissue of Native Americans taken between 1899 and 1910 shares space with a 1790 painting on silk by by Utamaro.

It's East meets West, circa 1830, when the wood-block Japanese landscapes of Hiroshige hang nearby the quintessentially North American wildlife depicted by John J. Audubon. Art lovers of a more contemporary bent might be drawn to the works by Picasso, Miro and Chagall. And while some of the names are as familiar as breakfast cereal brands, others may come as a new delightful discovery. Altogether, the works of 44 different artists are on display. The common thread linking the pieces together is their museum quality.

The show opens to the general public Saturday, Aug. 6 and continues through Sunday, Aug. 7. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 12 noon to 4 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $5 per person and may be purchased at the door.

The art center is located at 119 Ripley Road in the heart of Cohasset village. For more information, call 383-9548.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

BUYING A HOUSE LOT

QUESTION: Can you give me advice on buying a lot on which to build a home?

ANSWER: Generally speaking, the more you pay for a lot, the surer you are of getting your money's worth. If you pay x-amount of dollars for a developed lot with utility lines already in, you may be better off than buying the same lot for half the amount before roads and utilities are built out to it. Development costs vary, but almost anywhere they are rising. If you are not a land expert, have a Realtor do your negotiating. His or her most valuable asset is knowledge of local property values, zoning and the prospects of future land values.

Cohasset's carillon concerts are a Common occurrence...

high pitched bells respond to the slightest touch — the smallest weighs only 12 pounds — getting sound from the big bells requires a firm hand.

"The deepest sound comes from the bell that weighs 11,000 pounds," Kennedy tells visitors. "That is our biggie."

Because the system is entirely manual, the carillonneur can control the volume and tone of the bells, giving the music an incredible complexity not possible with electric systems. The foot pedals, Kennedy explains, duplicate the lowest 2-1/2 octaves of the levers.

The carillon wasn't always as large as it is today. In 1924, an English company built the first 23 bells. They were donated to the church by Jane W. Bancroft in memory of her mother, Jessie M. Barron. In 1925, the carillon was expanded to 43 bells and eight more were added in 1928.

In 1989-90, the carillon was completely renovated by the John Taylor bell foundry in England. At that time it was enlarged to its present size. The church also added heat and air-conditioning to the keyboard room and installed a sound system so the carillonneur can hear what he or she is playing.

"The carillonneur can hear the applause and everything," Kennedy said. "Including the cars honking and the dogs barking."

Playing the carillon and arranging for guests performers is the task of head carillonneur Sally Slade Warner and Kennedy. In the beginning, playing took tremendous courage.

"When I first took lessons, there was no way to practice," Kennedy explained. "We would memorize the music and absolutely cross our fingers and pray 'Please God, don't let me make a mistake.

"If you hit a wrong note," she added, "everyone in town hears it."

The best advice Kennedy every got is a twist on the actor's adage "the show must go on."

"You never stop if you make a mistake," Kennedy said. "You keep right on going."

But the reason behind the dictum may surprise non-musicians. According to Kennedy, listeners "fill in" the right note if the musician keeps going.

Things are a little easier today — St. Stephen's now has a practice clavier in a studio located in the parish house. The replica clavier isn't attached to bells, however. When the carillonneur plays, the sound is produced by small mallets striking metal tone bars.

On a recent Sunday, the guest carillonneur was Richard M. Watson of Georgetown, Ohio. Watson played original music composed for the carillon by Arthur Bigelow, Johan Franco, Ferdinand Timmermans, Matthias Van den Gheyn and Henry Wesson. He also played arrangements by Bach, Carvalho and Strauss and added The Star Spangled Banner and a trio of American folk songs to his repertoire.

Far below his vantage point, his rapt audience sat. They came with plaid stadium blankets, beach chairs or camped out in the grass. Dress for the concert took a decided casual turn, with one young lad decked out in Batman jammies and cape.

And as the music filled the air, one tiny tot half toddled, half tap danced his way around the common, frequently stopping to utter what must be his two favorite words: daddy and duck.

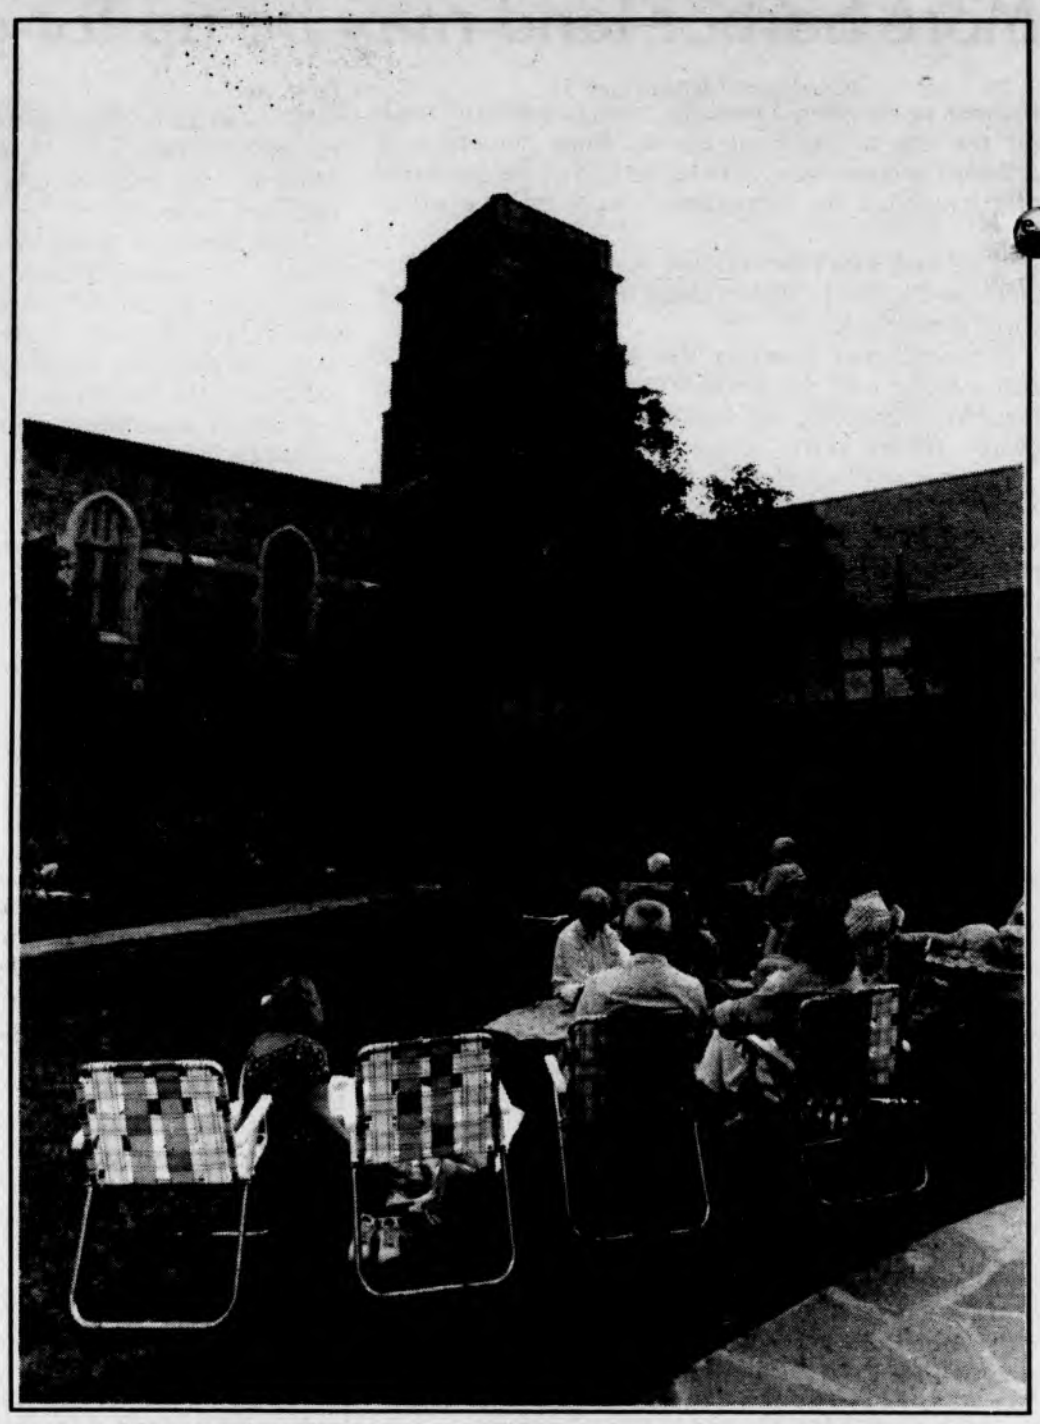
Although most of the concertgoers gravitated to the common, Kennedy and Warner say it is definitely not the best spot for hearing the carillon at its best advantage. The trees, fountains and traffic all serve to muffle the sound, they explain.

According to the two carillonneurs, the best spot in town is halfway down Stagecoach Way, the cobblestone pathway that leads from Main Street to the town parking lot.

The church courtyard on Highland Avenue runs a close second for listening and the view of the church and the huge boulders lends its own touch of romance to the experience.

Wherever you choose to listen from, the most important guide is that you be able to see the openings in the belfry.

Following the concert, Kennedy gave a tour and demonstration of the carillon. many of the concertgoers wended their way up the steep staircase to view the clavier and the bells above. Hingham tot Clare Murphy, 2-1/2, and Scituate resident Ben Cohen, 8, got the thrill of a lifetime when Kennedy let them try their hand at playing the bells.



Area residents enjoy the summer Sunday evening tradition of a carillon concert.

Weld to get on board...

long to see this project begin." McDonald said.

"This legislation makes it loud and clear that we will not stand for any additional unnecessary delays."

McDonald's provision to the bill went along with a $50 million commitment from the state to construct a rail tunnel under Hingham square.

Incorporated into its $6 billion Transportation Bond bill, the state senate approved both the provision and the funds for the tunnel, should it be required.

According to the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act (ISTEA), signed by former President George Bush in 1991, should a tunnel be necessary to the completion of a rail project, the federal government would have to match the state's share 50-50. With $50 million from both the state and federal government, the short tunnel, which could cost $100 million to construct, would be covered.

In a statement released this week, McDonald expressed dismay that T General Manager John Haley was not sure if federal transportation monies would be eligible for the tunnel in response to the senate inclusion of the funding and additional language that would prevent the T from building any other commuter rail line until the Greenbush line was under consideration.

The senator pointed to a March 31 meeting between himself, state Rep. Frank Hynes, Haley's chief of staff Robert Mabardy and two regional representatives of the Federal Highway Administration (FTA), which discussed the Citizen's Advisory Committee's (CAC) recommendation to build a tunnel. After 18 months of study, the CAC, a state-appointed committee with representatives from all towns in the Greenbush corridor reached a consensus and endorsed Alternative 6A, which is restoration of surface rail from Boston to Scituate with a short tunnel under Hingham Square.

"At that (March 31) meeting, federal representatives maintained under under ISTEA, states have the authority within certain guidelines to determine how to best meet their own transportation needs," McDonald recalled. "It was unequivocally stated that if a tunnel is determined to be necessary, federal monies can be used for its construction."

Senator McDonald's Legislative Aid William Ryan said the senator was eager to get the state's commitment ahead of time to help expedite both the MBTA and the Weld administration's movement on the restoration of the Greenbush line.

"The senator has been concerned by the governor's lack of discussion on the transportation needs of the South Shore and feels an obligation to remind the governor of the needs of his constituents," said Ryan.

Since his time as a selectman in Weymouth, McDonald has supported restoration of rail service to the South Shore and William Grimes, chairman of the Back On Track pro-train group is encouraged by the senator's efforts.

"I am glad to hear this news," Grimes said.

"It is indicative of the strong position taken by our legislators down here, in favor of restoration since discussion began over a decade ago," he added.

Grimes said he was glad that the new legislation "particularly addressed an issue (the tunnel option) that had proved to be a divisive issue for so long."

The short tunnel option, known to the MBTA as alternative 6A, was a long worked for compromise that brought Grimes' group and Hingham Historical Commission Chairman Alexander Macmillan into agreement on the restoration of the train through Hingham.

"It was the solution that Back on Track and the Citizens Advisory Committee endorsed," said Grimes who hopes the senate approval will help "keep the force on momentum going on this project." Grimes called McDonald's legislation "an important and daring stroke" and noted, "it goes a long way toward making a commitment to what we need on the South Shore."

Ryan said the senator has heard the governor and the secretary of transportation James Kerasiotes say there is a need for a transportation solution for the South Shore and is "trying to have the governor and his administration put their money where their mouth is."

Weld will have a chance to veto the amendment to the bond bill after a Conference Committee consisting of members of both the House and Senate deliberate on it. McDonald is confident that the provision will be included in the final bill.

"With the help of Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield) on the House side, I believe the Conference Committee members can be persuaded to the merits of this amendment," McDonald said.

Rail opponent and spokesperson for the anti-Greenbush group Coastal Coalition, Nancy Buckley of Hingham, said her group's position is that for $36 million, the MBTA could develop a boat and bus system to transport the 3,000 people expected to take the train. Buses and boats are a transportation alternative that is far less expensive than restoring the Greenbush Line, she said.

around town

by Sallyann Chatterton

Our neighborhood is really "newsy" this week! First of all, Greg, Ellen, Jay, Patrick, Sarah and Emily Bertovich have moved to Summer St. They were great neighbors, nice people that we will miss! Best of luck to all of you in your beautiful new home!

Another big van was on the street Saturday, at the parsonage. It was full of furniture and items to go to Appalachia, with the Rev. Gary Ritts at the "helm," and more in the van behind him. Can you imagine the pleasure the family will get when they see all of their new furnishings arrive? A round of applause to all that made the whole effort possible, and to those who donated their time, efforts, and furnishings! Here's to a safe trip!

The Baird family is full of news too! Pat and Bill's oldest son, Bill, has just completed the U.S. Air Force Academy's summer flight training program. He loved his first solo flight! Bill is entering his First Class (senior) year as a Cadet Captain in charge of the Wing Comm. and Post. He is majoring in Mechanical Engineering. Their son, Dan, attained Dean's List status in the School of Engineering at Vanderbilt University. Here's to two enthusiast and successful young men, everyone is proud of you, Bill and Dan.

Bob and Carol Ciciotte are thrilled new grandparents! Their granddaughter's name is Carly Anne, born June 27 to Ian and Tracy Ciciotte MacLean. Carol recently returned from Boulder, Col., where she visited the beautiful Carly Anne, hope she has tons of pictures to show everyone! Congratulations to all of you.

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Vicki Kelley this week, her big day was July 27. We also hope that Vicki is feeling better as she reads this, she had two impacted wisdom teeth extracted shortly after her big day.

Alex Johnston also celebrated a birthday last week, his tenth. Hope it was a happy day for you, Alex.

Amanda Sweeney, daughter of Avis Sweeney, has exciting news, she was recently engaged to Kevin McCullan. They will be married next May.

Babson College sends word that Richard P. Wheeler received an honorary bachelor of science degree at the school's half-century commencement ceremonies. He was honored with 56 graduates of the Babson Institute who graduated prior to 1944. The honorees were recognized for their pioneering presence in the history and success of the College.

It is hard to believe that Al and Helen Livingston have sold their home and will be moving to Florida at summer's end. They both have been such a big part of our town for so long. By the way, Al is feeling much better; that's the good news!

Congratulations go to Esther Pratt, who is Doctor Pratt now. Esther recently received her Doctor of Psychology. She and Stuart are living in Vermont now, and are loving it there. We all miss them, they are fine people who did a lot for our town and the people in it.

James Moore, the son of James and Barbara Moore, was one of 179 students receiving graduate degrees in business from Dartmouth's Amos Tuck School of Business Administration at commencement ceremonies recently, and we applaud you for your efforts James.

Paul M. Wilson makes the news this week, he attained dean's list status at the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Paul is majoring in criminal justice.

The University of Mass. at Amherst announces that Veronica M. DeVos and Erin C. McAllister qualified for the dean's list for the 1994 spring semester.

And, Boston University named three Cohasset residents to the dean's list for the spring semester. Students recognized for this honor include: Katherine P. Dennis, Douglas W. Moe, and Tara P. Volungis.

Another Cohasset scholar, Lori Gallant, made the dean's list at Westfield State College for the Spring semester. Lori's major is psychology.

That's it for this week, don't forget to call with your news.

Sargents celebrate 50th anniversary

Eileen and Stewart Sargent celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at a family reception held at the Barker Tavern in Scituate June 25. The Sargents were married May 19, 1944 at the Beechwood Congregational Church in Cohasset and lived in the town until their retirement to Eastman in Grantham, N.H. in 1982.

Their children, Janet Simblist of Stamford, Conn., Linda Beach of Livermore, Calif. and Jon Sargent of Gaithersburg, Md. were on hand to celebrate with their families. Other family members present were Mrs. Dora Holt and Mr. and Mrs. Fran Mitchell.

The porcelain figure of a bride and groom that topped their wedding cake 50 years ago was again used on their anniversary cake.

Memorial service for Ron Rawson

A memorial service for Ron Rawson, 76, of Cohasset, president of the South Shore Art Center and operator of the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset for 20 years, will be held at 4 p.m Sunday Aug. 7 at St. Stephen's Parish, 16 Highland Ave.

Mr. Rawson, a national officer of the Screen Actors Guild, past president of the New York Screen Actors Guild and chairman of the Motion Picture Players Welfare Fund in New York, died of pancreatic cancer July 18 at his home.

A native of Clear Lake, Iowa, he had homes in New York, N.Y. and Cohasset.

He leaves his wife, Dr. Ruth (Miller) Rawson; two daughters, Jan McCormick of Chicago and Jean Rawson-Terhaar of Rockville, Md.; a sister, Marlys Rawson of Iowa; four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

There are no visiting hours.

Arrangements are being made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Memorial donations may be made to St. Stephen's Parish, the South Shore Art Center or the South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, Braintree.

Mercy Buck

Committal services for Mercy Robbins (Pegram) Buck, 94, of Short Hills, N.J., Cohasset and St. Louis, Mo., will be conducted at 11 a.m. Saturday, July 23, at Cohasset Central Cemetery.

Mrs. Buck died June 27 in St. Louis following a brief illness.

Born in New York City, she graduated from Vassar College.

A homemaker, she was a member of the Sorosis Club of New York.

Wife of the late Horace M. Buck, she leaves Sarah Zey and Jean Crawford, both of St. Louis, Mary Mathews of Lake Forest, Ill., Anne Bushnell of Cambridge and Richard Buck of Lothian, Md.

She was the daughter of the late George H. and Jessie (Crawford) Pegram.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the Cohasset Historical Society.

Arrangements were completed by the McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

Informed voting

When was the last time your voted?

If you said the Presidential election nearly two years ago in November 1992 — you're not alone.

Statistics show that many more of us get excited about voting in elections when the Oval Office is up for grabs than in town or state elections. The fact is that the majority of us stay home when the time comes to vote for our state representative on Beacon Hill or our local selectman.

And sadly, thousands of eligible Massachusetts citizens are not even registered to vote. Many believe that's because registering to vote requires a visit to town hall which is just not convenient in our busy lives.

But the number of unregistered citizens may change.

A new Motor Voter law which took effect July 1 enables new voters to register without the need to go to town hall at all. Affidavits which can be filled out and mailed to elections officers are available at libraries and other public places.

Next year, registering gets even more convenient. New voters can register at the Department of Motor Vehicles and other designated registration sites.

The law is designed to prompt tens of thousands of citizens to join the voter rolls and participate in the electoral process, officials say.

But we hope the Motor Voter law does more than sign people up.

While voting for President is easy by election day because those running have been thoroughly scrutinized and covered extensively by all forms of media — making an informed decision about other candidates and issues is not.

This September's primary election will determine who will run in November. And in addition to voting for our next U.S. Senator, Congressman, Governor, state Senator and state Representative in November — we'll be deciding on issues like the proposed state Graduated Income Tax and term limits.

Voting should not be a guessing game. We shouldn't go down the list and tick off yes to a Ballot Question because we just heard a 30-second sound bite on the radio that it would be good for us.

Informed voting — accepting the responsibility of having an opinion backed up by careful reading and reflection — is what the right to vote is really all about.

Making registering easy won't change that simple fact.

To our readers

A letter was sent to our newspaper about the nature of some written commentaries by sports columnist David McKee.

The letter expressed concerns that Mr. McKee had made unwarranted, direct personal attacks towards an East Bridgewater basketball coach, Steve Fernandes, and a Norwell High football player Joe Krainin during the previous sports year. In addition, there were concerns expressed about references to alcohol use in his writings.

The Mariner apologizes for any harm inflicted upon Fernandes and Krainin.

Mr. McKee also wishes to apologize for any harm he may have caused with his commentaries.

Both Fernandes and Krainin have contributed much to their sports and did not deserve such criticism.

In the future, there will be no such personal attacks in any sports articles. Stories and commentaries shall remain upbeat and positive and all references to drinking shall be omitted.

The Mariner intends to recognize the tremendous contributions that athletes and coaches make to their communities.

Landfill expansion opposed

To the Editor:

Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill has recently filed its Supplemental Final Environmental Impact Report (SFEIR) for its proposed 27.5 acre "Area V" expansion.

I urge everyone reading this letter to review the SFEIR and to send a written comment letter to the state. Public opposition has been successful in defeating this proposal in the past; it's time to speak out again.

This proposed expansion threatens our water supply, our air quality, and our quality of life in Cohasset. We have a realistic chance of defeating this expansion proposal if we can show the state the overwhelming public opposition to it.

Firefighters are thanked for help

(Ed's note: The following letter was sent to selectmen.)

Dear Sirs:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank several members of the Cohasset Fire Department who were so wonderful to me when I took ill at the South Shore Music Circus last Friday night. They are Captain Gurry, Tom Finegan, Matt Marr and Bill Litchfield. These men are a credit to the Fire Department and I would like to also extend my appreciation to you for employing such efficient and caring people.

Full funding for tobacco control urged

To the Editor:

In the Question 1 referendum of 1992, Massachusetts citizens voted to tax tobacco products to fund programs for education, youth prevention and cessation. Despite the clarity of Question 1's mandate, the Senate voted to cut the 1995 budget and divert $19 million from tobacco control. The governor recommended and the House of Representatives voted to support full funding in 1995, the Senate did not.

It is anticipated that there will be $137 million in the Question 1 fund this year.l The Tobacco Control Program required only $96 million to continue at 1994 funding levels. This will maintain an effort which has already resulted in an 18 percent drop in tobacco sales since the program's inception.

The Senate's motives for the cut in funding are unclear, but there is potential impact on local boards of health conducting tobacco control and awareness programs for over 80 percent of the Commonwealth's citizens. Local programs targeting youth (the tobacco cartel's replacement smokers) and other vulnerable populations are at risk of disappearing just as the program is getting off the ground.

Within the next two weeks, the legislature will vote on a supplemental budget with an amendment to restore the $19 million which the Senate voted to divert from tobacco control efforts mandateed by the voters in Question 1.

It is vital for citizens to contact their legislators, reminding them why the voters supported the Question 1 initiative in the first place. Voters must encourage support of the supplemental budget amendment, so very important to the public health interest and the long-term control of health care costs in the Commonwealth.

disability issues

By Michele Buckley
Chairman, Cohasset Commission on Disabilities
Special to the Mariner

For approximately the past five years, the Cohasset Commission on Disabilities has worked with other organizations to promote accessibility for temporarily or permanently disabled residents of Cohasset. The commission lent support to the Sandy Beach Association when they built a ramp for the beach.

The Commission joined with the Council on Aging in purchasing a van for disabled residents sharing responsibilities with Hingham. Both towns leased a van from the Executive Office on Transportation through a program administered by the South Shore Elder Services. Hingham, being the host town, will pay two-thirds of the maintenance cost. Subsequently, Cohasset will pay one-third of the cost. Cohasset uses the van on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Any resident interested in transportation may use the van.

As of now, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library provides a HP parking space. In compliance with the Architectural Access Board, all parking lots must have at least one parking space for disabled people. Going along with the A.A.B., the children's bathroom will be renovated. The Architectural Access Board, a state regulatory board, follows the guidelines set by the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The Cohasset Jr.-Sr. High School received a variance from the Architectural Access Board to install an inclined wheelchair lift. This wheelchair lift will enable any disabled student access to any part of the Junior/ Senior High School facility. In September, a disabled student will need this to attend classes.

Other facilities in town that allow disabled people to access their buildings are the Cohasset Lightkeeper's House. HP parking spaces and ramps allow everyone the opportunity to enjoy the beautiful area. Some of the other buildings include St. Anthony's Parish, the Second Congregational Church and the Pilgrim's Cooperative Bank. Although this list may not be inclusive, it gives an idea of the great cooperation within the town to allow disabled people to live ordinary lives without too many manmade barriers.

Why does Cohasset need a commission on disabilities? A commission serves the town in several ways. First, a commission would work to develop self-advocacy among disabled citizens. All citizens would be educated in the laws pertaining to disabilities. A commission would be responsible for making information available to all residents. The commission would provide information and refer individuals to appropriate agencies. With the implementation of the Americans With Disabilities Act, all Cohasset residents should be aware of any changes that might occur.

In the 1980's, the Massachusetts Office on Disability developed the concept of each town and/or city establishing a commission. Since then, many communities have developed a commission. In Cohasset, a warrant article was passed at a town meeting . Since then, citizens of Cohasset have volunteered their time to make life easier for disabled citizens of Cohasset. Each commission has seven members and meets six times a year. Each commission is unique because each town/ city have different needs. Where should the commission direct its efforts? Because transportation is so important to a disabled person, we will continue to be involved with the operation of the van. Upcoming issues of concern are heath care reform and accessibility of businesses. Please share your opinion about the commission, its direction and future topics of concern.

Carolyn Van Tine, Republican candidate for the Plymouth/Norfolk District senate seat, has opened her campaign headquarters at 112 North St. in Hingham. Voter registration for all residents of the Plymouth/Norfolk District are available at the headquarters.

Van Tine, a resident of Weymouth, practices law in Hingham. A graduate of Rollins College, she has studied at the University of London and the London School of Economics.l While a student a the Suffolk University Law School, she joined the Volunteer Prosecutor's Program where she gained courtroom experience at the Chelsea District Court. She was also recipient of the American Jurisprudence Award in State Constitutional Law.

As a volunteer law clerk in the Probate and Family Court of Middlesex County, she dealt with the issues of crime and domestic violence.

In addition to her responsibilities with her private law practice, she participates in the Lawyer for the Day Program at the Middlesex Probate Court providing legal advice to those otherwise unable to afford it.

Van Tine recognizes the district is in need of an effective state senator who will address the concerns of the public, not just the senate leadership. She expects to be known for her concern for restoring public confidence in elected officials. Attention to constituent service, working with the administration to bolster economic strength and being concerned about the ethical conduct of the senate and its members will be priorities.

Van Tine will build a grass roots campaign effort, looking to meet as many voters as possible and listen to their concerns.

On taxes, she said, "I will join with Governor Weld in getting the government off the backs and out of the wallets of our people. I will fight to preserve and protect Proposition 2 1/2,."

On crime Van Tine feels, "Hardened criminals are a menace to our society...if criminals have little sympathy for the dignity of these good people, I shall have little sympathy for these criminals."

In an apparent slap at the current incumbent, she said, "Ethics in government will be an important focus of my attention. Chairing an ethics committee and refusing to call hearings is hardly a way to restore the public's trust."

Thomas L.P. O'Donnell of Hingham is honorary Van Tine campaign chairman, Karen McArdle of Marshfield is treasurer and Darthea Collins of Hingham is campaign manager.

Hingham resident Donald A. Hussey, a former classroom teacher and businessman is focusing on crime, education and welfare reform as a candidate in the Republican primary for the state senate.

He met with Scituate residents at The Barker Tavern stating that, "While everyone agrees that the broader social issues of violent crime, education and welfare reform demand immediate and appropriate action, we should also focus on helping communities solve local issues as well." He cited such local issues as the Whitman's Pond algae problem in Weymouth; the annual midge infestation problem along Straits Pond in Hull and Cohasset and Mushquashicut Pond in Scituate; the disrepair of the MDC properties in Hull and the eroding seawall along Nantasket Beach; the heavy volume of summertime traffic on Main Street in Hingham; and the safe operation of the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant .

The Hussey campaign is seeking volunteers for each of the communities in the district. Anyone wishing to help should call 749-5117.

Bob Hedlund, who is seeking election to the senate seat he held from 1991-1992 was joined by more than 350 supporters for a recent fund-raiser cruise in Boston Harbor. Hedlund used the occasion to voice the main themes of his campaign, reiterating his commitment to the middle class and the need to restore integrity to government and faith in the political process.

"As senator, I stood with the middle class in the Plymouth-Norfolk District," Hedlund said. "and when I return to office, I intend to carry out the people's business, your business, once again." Frustrated by the gridlock on Beacon Hill, Hedlund said he is eager to continue the work he began in 1991, pushing for welfare reform, auto insurance reform, tax cuts and a meaningful crime package.

"Constituents are fed up with the empty promises made by politicians, promises that serve no one but the politicians themselves," said Hedlund who has vowed to maintain his independence and not to accept special interest PAC or lobbyist money which "corrupts and compromises candidates."

Hedlund has invited his two Republican opponents to debate the issues. The first will be hosted by the Hull Republican Town Committee and held throughout the Plymouth-Norfolk District which encompasses Duxbury, Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Weymouth and some precincts in Braintree.

As senator, his efforts on behalf of taxpayers and his leadership on tax and spend issues earned him a 100 percent rating from Citizens for Limited Taxation. He also played a prominent and aggressive role in preventing the doubling of the excise tax, repealing of the service tax and blocking a back door attempt that would have increased the pensions of certain legislators.

Weymouth attorney and Democratic state senate candidate, Timothy Gage, called upon Senator Brian McDonald to "put his money where his mouth is" on the issue of campaign finance reform.

Gage, the only challenger to McDonald in the September primary, said he sees campaign finance reform as a key issue in the battle to return stat government o the people. Gage sent a formal request to McDonald asking the senator to release his records regarding lobbyists and political action committees who have contributed to his campaign since Senate President Bulger appointed McDonald chairman of the Senate Insurance Committee. McDonald has not responded to the request.

He has challenged McDonald to a series of debates to be held throughout the district, sponsored and moderated by local media.

"Senator McDonald's campaign committee statements which are available are replete with lobbyists and PAC contributions and I can only imagine that the list he is hiding would be much more damaging," Gage said. "I have been told by several sources that McDonald's recent fund-raisers have been swarming with insurance lobbyists and others related to special interest groups. The public has a right to know if their senator is actively participating in the influence peddling scheme he used to find so abhorrent," Gage continued. Gage pointed out that McDonald has switched his position on several key issues since being elected including the death penalty, welfare reform, rules reform and his support for Senator Bulger.

Another area of campaign finance reform Gage supports is limiting the amount of money incumbents can raise and carryover in their campaign account and the amount of money candidates can spend in a given race. "We need to level the playing field to give challengers a chance when they are up against incumbents like Senator McDonald who spend their time in office amassing huge campaign funds by cashing in on their position of trust," said Gage.

Register to vote day!

Wednesday, Aug. 10, from 2 to 6 p.m., Cohasset Knoll Skilled Nursing and Rehabilitation Facility in Cohasset will sponsor a voter registration day. The VOTE '94 event is co-sponsored by the resident's council at the Cohasset Knoll nursing home. The public is encouraged to attend and register to vote in the Sept. 20 primary election.

According to Cohasset Knoll Nursing Facility Administrator Frank Schatz: "Most likely the United States will have some form of national health care coverage by the turn of the century. What that coverage will be and who will receive it will be determined by those we place in public office during this and future elections. It is critically important that each one of us becomes involved in selecting our leaders, and that means having the ability to vote. Our residents have spent a lifetime participating in the democratic process. We urge eligible yet unregistered voters to join them and participate in the democratic process."

The voter registration process has been simplified this year with the introduction of mail-in voter registration forms. To be eligible to vote in Massachusetts elections, individuals must be U. S. citizens, residents of Massachusetts, and be at least 18 years old on or before the next election.

Once the registration process is completed, registration is permanent. Individuals need only register again if they move or change their name.

The deadline to register to vote in the Sept. 20 primary is Aug. 23. The deadline to register to vote in the Nov. 8 general election is Oct. 11.

"Cohasset Knoll Skilled Nursing and Rehabilitation Facility is handicapped accessible and parking is available for those seeking to register to vote," Schatz said.

While Pierson to Person may be in re-runs for the summer, Wigmore Pierson isn't taking a vacation from the show. Pierson is busy planning his talk show's seventh season, which looks to be his best and most innovative yet.

Pierson, 53, is a nine year resident of Cohasset and has been informing, entertaining and educating South Shore residents on hundreds of interesting topics since October, 1987. While Pierson started the show in Cohasset, with a primarily Cohasset focus, the show has grown in scope and has broadened to include viewers and guests from 35 South Shore towns.

And surprisingly enough, television is only a hobby for Pierson who has spent more than 20 years in the career counseling business. Pierson lived in Bethesda, Maryland before coming to Cohasset and said he had never been exposed to cable television. After two years in Cohasset it occurred to Pierson that there was no informational programming that dealt with issues specifically concerning the South Shore.

"I walked in off the street to American Cable Systems in Cohasset Village, introduced myself and gave my idea for a show," he said.

The idea was to interview local residents on politics, education, the arts and other topics of interest, to inform and entertain local viewers.

Much to Pierson's amazement, Program Manager

The program raised more than $700 for the Jimmy Fund and was televised on the special two-hour season finale of Pierson-to-Person in June.

Hobby is labor of love for Cohasset's TV talk host

Jeff Rhind liked the idea and told him to get started planning his first show.

Pierson said of his first show "I was scared to death." Cohasset's town moderator was the first guest on what Pierson called Cohasset Talks: Pierson to Person. Since then the name has been shortened and Pierson is far more at home in front of the camera.

By 1990, when Continental Cablevision bought American Cable Systems, Pierson's show expanded to include Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell, and Hanover viewers and Pierson decided to go live with the show.

"I thought it would be interesting and fun to go live. We tried it and it worked," said Pierson, who maintained that the spontaneity of live shows makes them more lively and more demanding on the whole crew.

The whole crew is generally 12-14 volunteers for each show. Pierson said he is very thankful for the 125 volunteers that have helped out behind the scenes over the last seven years, including Cohasset resident Harriet Partridge who has been there every Thursday night since the beginning, Pierson said.

And since the beginning, Pierson has interviewed more than 1100 guests, everyone from Governor William Weld, to professional wrestler Walter "Killer" Kowalski. Pierson has spoken to educators, sports figures, psychiatrists, musicians and many politicians.

Politics is a special interest of Pierson, who ran for state representative from Newton, in both 1966 and 1968. Pierson did not win either election but said he enjoyed the experience of being a candidate and agreed with former President Theodore Roosevelt on the importance of "getting into the fray, contributing and getting involved in some way, at some level.

'There are few subjects that involve the human endeavor that we haven't had on.'
— Wigmore Pierson

During his thirteen years in the Washington D.C., Pierson had the opportunity to work on the Nixon's national staff for the Partners of the Americas. Pierson gained an interest in Latin America when he served in the Peace Corps in Peru in the mid-60's. And in 1976, Pierson worked for a few months on President Gerald Ford's staff as an "advance man" helping to plan out the detailed itinerary and movements of the president.

In fact, Pierson said he has met or seen every U.S. President in his life time, with the exception of Franklin D. Roosevelt and George Bush. Pierson recalled running into Ronald Reagan outside St. John's Church in Washington D.C. the day before he was shot.

As for the present administration, Pierson said a lot hinges on President Clinton's successful handling and passage of health care reform along with situations in Haiti and North Korea.

"Unless in the next 60-120 days he's able to convince the American people that he's in charge and has firmness of direction in terms of his policies in these areas, he's in danger of being a one term president," Pierson said.

"Clinton's fatal flaw," said Pierson "is indecisiveness and it is part of his personality." With his vast knowledge of the presidency of this nation, Pierson compares Clinton to Harding who also placed friends in positions of power and was betrayed and let down.

Politics, however interesting to Pierson, does not dominate his show. Election season debates at the town and state level are an annual feature, but so are topics like mental health, prison fellowship, and boxing, all of which will be a part of this season's programming. Residents can catch Pierson to person on Thursday nights from 8 to 9 p.m. on channel's 3 and 53. A re-broadcast of the Thursday show is aired Sunday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m. on channel 53.

And while the show is no longer purely local, Pierson gives a special nod to his home town with a show focusing on Cohasset only.

Whether its political debates and analysis or an hour of comedy, Pierson said he enjoys experimenting with new ideas and formats all the time.

"There are few subjects that involve the human endeavor that we haven't had on," said Pierson who maintained he has fun with it and never takes himself too seriously. Because the show has become so well known, Pierson said guests are easier to book now, then they were in the beginning and he intends to keep up with the show "as long as it works, and I'm having fun."

Pierson has three children, all of whom attend Hingham's Derby Academy and said in "real life" he continues to be a career counselor with offices in Norwell. Pierson said he loves his work and finds it very rewarding.

Service is recognized

Eleven South Shore residents have received awards from the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society for outstanding service to cancer patients in this area.

Those honored are members of a corps of volunteer drivers organized by the Service Committee of the Unit and during the past year made 20 or more trips to area hospitals with patients needing treatments.

Operating on assignment from a "hotline" office in Hingham, the volunteer drivers offer free transportation to cancer patients often requiring daily treatment over a period of 6-7 weeks. At times the service has been provided for as many as 10 patients a day.

Persons needing transportation or willing to be volunteer drivers are invited to call the "hotline", 749-2535.

Those receiving awards are John Campbell and Osborn Ingram from Cohasset.

Homeless benefit slated

The Coastal Youth Theater Guild will present Neil Simon's comedy, "Brighton Beach Memoirs" at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday August 12 and 13 at the Hingham High School Auditorium. All tickets are $6 and proceeds will benefit the South Shore Friends of the Homeless.

The Coastal Youth Theater Guild is an organization created for students 14 to 19 years of age and is produced, directed and administered by the students.

Cast members include Anne Harris, Michael Conway, Grace Deveny, Abby Klima, Chris Millburg, Carey Brandenburg and Ryan Overbeck. Bryan Hurley is the producer and Sarah Daubenspeck is assistant producer. Executive director is Susannah Hills, assisted by David Perkinson who also designed and constructed the set.

Tickets may be purchased at the door or by calling Bryan Hurley at 749-3016 or Susannah Hills at 749-5402.

Clambake is planned

The Sailing Club is sponsoring a clambake for members and guests from 7 p.m. to midnight Saturday Aug. 13. Cohasset's Dan Anderson will provide the clambake and DJ Ron Burtells will provide music for dancing.

The menu includes New England Clam Chowder with oyster crackers, steamers with drawn butter, native corn on the cob, sweet sausage, coleslaw and assorted rolls, chilled watermelon and a choice of live lobster (1.25 lbs) or a 12 oz. sirloin steak. Cost is $20 per person and participants should bring their own beverages. The event will be held rain or shine. Dress is very casual (jeans and sneakers).

Tickets must be paid for no later than Wednesday Aug. 10. Payment may be sent to Sail Club with children and given to the instructor or dropped off to Lyn Previte, 38 Summer St. Checks should indicate number of steak or lobster dinners desired. Tickets will be held at the door. For information call Lyn Previte at 383-9723.

Australian is guest recitalist

A concert on the 57-bell Cohasset Carillon will be presented at 6 p.m. Sunday evening, Aug. 7, by Suzanne Magassy, carillonist of the Canberra Carillon in Canberra, Australia.

Magassy has performed many recitals in North America and in Europe. A student of the late Australian carillonneur John Gordon, she has continued her studies with well-known carillonneurs in several countries. She was graduated from Sydney Teachers' College as a high school music teacher, and from the Sydney Conservatorium of Music as a pianist. In addition to her activities as a carillonist, she works with disabled school children in Canberra.

Her Cohasset program will feature carillon compositions by John Gordon, Ronald Barnes and Christopher Lyndon-Gee, transcriptions from the music of Leopold Mozart, Massenet, Boito, Lehar and Bach, and arrangements of music from "Cats", "Les Miserables" and "The Sting."

The carillon of 57 English bells is located in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, overlooking Cohasset Common. The recital will begin at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. In case of rain, listen from your parked car. Printed programs will be available in the church courtyard on Highland Ave., and on the Common. After the recital there will be a brief tour of the tower and carillon for interested persons who wish to climb the 45 steps to the playing cabin.

For further information, telephone St. Stephen's Church at 617/383-1083, or the church carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner at 508/475-2599, or Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur, at 617/383-9599.

New commissioner will have a hand in fine(s) decision

By Sean Sweeney
Mariner correspondent

Selectmen and water commissioners met jointly last Thursday and appointed Pond Street resident Robert Kasameyer to fill a vacancy on the water commission.

They also looked at the possibility of fining citizens who violate the town's water restrictions. Currently outdoor watering is allowed by hand-held hose only between the hours of 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.

Kasameyer will fill the position vacated by former commissioner Ronald Goodwin until the April town election.

Kasameyer was nominated by selectman Merle Brown and received approval on a 4-3 vote. Water commissioner William Montouri then moved that the approval be unanimous and it was so voted.

Kasameyer, 17 Pond St., is a management consultant providing corporate development and restructuring support for technology-based companies through his own company REK Associates.

"I go into troubled companies and sort out what the real problems are," he said in an interview last week. "I determine what makes sense and develop an action plan to solve the problem."

Kasameyer, who has lived in town 16 years, said he became concerned about the town's water problems after reading the newspapers.

"I'd like to have the problem solved and think I can be of some use in solving it," he said.

Residents James Laggrotteria, Mark Bell, and Paul Laugelle also applied to fill the water commission seat vacated when Goodwin resigned last month.

In other business, the two boards addressed the ongoing problem of citizens violating the water ban which in in effect in Cohasset.

According to Town Counsel Richard Henderson, the town is presently operating under water restrictions and not under a water ban. He explained that a water ban is in effect when all new water hookups are prohibited and no new houses can be built due to water shortages.

Selectmen are concerned that water restrictions are not being taken seriously by all citizens and that the same people are continually refusing to abide by the restrictions. With this in mind, the board asked Henderson about possible options to make violation of restrictions a serious matter.

Henderson said the water commission is empowered to make regulations locally which are equally binding as statutes and by-laws. This approach would require that the water commission publish a notice of public hearing and also a copy of the proposed regulation. The commission could then approve the regulation at the public meeting by voting to approve the language of the regulation and the penalty to be assessed for violation of the regulation.

Once the regulation is enacted, violators would be brought before a magistrate in Quincy District Court for a magistrate's hearing. Henderson said violators would have to appear at the hearing and would not be able to pay the assessed fine by mail. Under this approach, water commissioners and police officers would be authorized to issue violations.

A second option available to the town in order to make the water regulations more enforceable would be to seek a declaration from the Department of Environmental Protection of a water emergency. Once such a declaration is issued, enforcement of violations would be pursued through the Attorney General's Office. Henderson does not feel that this is the appropriate option at this time as it would require that the town submit a proposed plan for dealing with the water emergency to the state, along with periodic progress reports.

"It is much easier to enforce these restrictions locally than to get the state to do it under the Water Management Act," Henderson said.

The water commission will now consider which option to pursue, but it would appear that local regulation will almost certainly be utilized. The water commission also expects to review all of its current regulations with the town counsel to update them for publication.

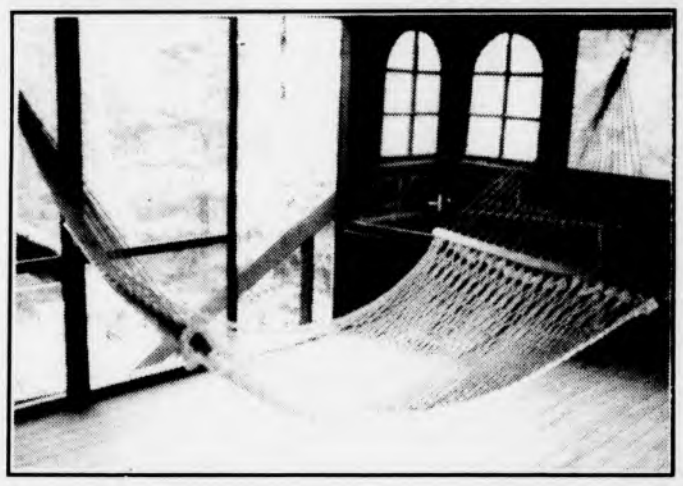
The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863



"It it's Thursday, this must be Italy."....or is it Villa Elena, Elaine Leonard's beautiful Italian villa at 38 Atlantic Avenue. The Italian gardens are enclosed by walls and arched doorways with custom-made iron gates and doors — one in particular designed to resemble a spider's web with a spider 'weaving' its web. The bubbling fountains and Italian statues are absolutely breathtaking. It is difficult to remember you are 40 feet above Atlantic Avenue while strolling through the garden with pergolas overhead laden with Wisteria. Tall cement urns grace the perimeter of the semi-circular brick patio; the patio off the living room has an overhead pergola and the master bedroom also has its own flower-boxed balcony. The fifth level of the Villa is a room with verdigris copper arched-top windows with screens to enjoy the summer breezes — this room houses a large string hammock — and you feel as if you are in a tree house, it is just spectacular! This is truly one of Cohasset's finest treasures. The Mariner thanks the owner for inviting us in to enjoy and share it with our readers. (Ginger Ferenz photos)

Babson soccer coach:
'Work on ball skills to be top player'

By David McKee
Mariner staff

If you want to become a top soccer player, you have to do more than just play youth soccer, according to Babson boys' soccer coach Jon Anderson.

Anderson, a Scituate resident and former boys' coach at Cohasset High, will be holding his fifth annual summer soccer camp over the next two weeks at Cohasset High.

Some 300 young players from ages 7-16 will participate at the camp.

Anderson said the best soccer players are developed with constant play in pick-up games.

"Youth soccer is a great way for youngsters to get involved with soccer," he said. "But having 11 players on a side is not necessarily the best way to develop soccer players because they do not touch the ball enough. And developing ball skills is the most important thing for soccer players. Players need to play street soccer on their own with three on three games or four on four games. That way, they really touch the ball."

Anderson's views have been incorporated into the Scituate Youth Soccer Program over the last year.

In the under ten division, youngster play five on five games.

"It has been great for the youngsters of Scituate because they get to touch the ball more than they would with an eleven person team," he said. "And the more they touch the ball, the more confidence they will have in their games."

Top athletes in all sports are developed through work on their own, according to Anderson.

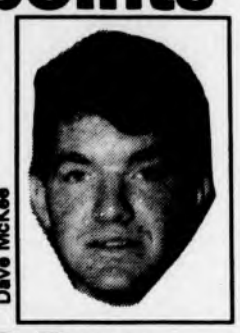
Joe Reardon



Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

Golf is to the 90s what Disco was to the 70s.

Everyone's doing it and most look pretty stupid out there shaking their thang.

Therefore, as a service to golfers all over the South Shore, I am putting on my Greg Norman Shark hat and offering a few pointers.

(For the record I am an excellent golfer and once birdied a par four at the Pembroke Country Club in a driving rain storm with borrowed clubs.)

Here we go or as we say on the links, FORE!

Driving

This is the most important part of the game.

If you hit it long and straight off the tee with your driver, people will yell, "You da' man!" whenever you swing.

However, after a few drives into the woods or into the water, people start to whisper, "He looks like a guy beating the dust out of a throw rug."

The keys to driving the ball are balance, rhythm and extension. (Coincidentally, those are the keys to doing "The Electric Slide.")

Anyway, take a nice balanced stance, bring the club back slowly and then accelerate to the ball and hit it with a force that would make Lizzie Borden and O.J. proud.

Keep your eyes on the ball and follow through with your arms.

When you hit the ball well it makes a whooshing sound.

A poorly hit ball sounds like a tire running over an apple.

There are Big Bertha's, Killer Whales and PING drivers available to golfers.

I say pick a driver that feels good in your hands.

Also go with a club that has some heft. You never know when you will be attacked by a rabid raccoon while trying to take out the garbage.

Long irons

Nobody hits long irons well.

Here's what usually happens. You hit a good tee shot and end up about 150 yards from the hole.

John Daly would probably use a putter and be on the green.

However, most of us would grab a three, four or a five iron and give it a whack.

You bring the club back you watch in horror as you rip out a chunk of grass that could cover Sy Sperling's bald head.

The ball floats about 29 yards and you are heading towards Humphrey Bogey territory.

I suggest you widen your stance, keep your backswing nice and compact and most importantly, let the club do the work.

That means flatten it out and make sure you pick the ball right off the fairway. Divots are not cool.

Short irons and sand traps

When you get close to the hole, touch is more important than power.

You cannot kill the ball or it will go flying over the green and land in some guy's pool.

Sharks crowned for second straight year

By Michael Rolandelli
Special to the Mariner

The 1994 Cohasset Land Sharks shocked all of Eastern Massachusetts Senior Babe Ruth League baseball. With a 10-6-1 regular season record, the Sharks advanced to the playoffs as the No. 4 seed in the South Division. Pembroke-Halifax were the first post-season victims of a hungry Cohasset squad despite their superior 12-3-1 regular-season record.

The Sharks ousted top-seeded Pembroke-Halifax in the three-game series by winning the first two games 5-4 and 3-2, respectively. After defeating Hanover in a three-game series of their own, Duxbury faced the Sharks in a three-game series to determine the South Division champion.

The first game, played in "the tank," was a dandy which ended in a 6-6 tie at the end of regulation play due to darkness. Game 2, scheduled at Duxbury the following day, was for all the marbles upon the agreement of both coaches. Therefore, Game 1 was counted as a win for both sides, meaning that a win by either team in Game 2 would be enough to win the best of three series.

The Sharks struck first in the second inning when Neven Bunstein scored on a Greg Stevens single. In the third, the Sharks mounted a two-out rally behind the swords of Chris Rolandelli, Scott Theriault, Bunstein and Nick Welz. Rolandelli walked. Theriault hit a hard ground ball, which was misplayed, to shortstop. Bunstein singled home Rolandelli. Welz walloped a screaming double which scored Theriault and Bunstein.

solid Shark defense yielded just three hits and one run through five innings. In fact, the Sharks had the game well in control until the bottom of the seventh, when Duxbury's Jonah Berger tripled to right with two outs and scored on an ensuing base hit. With first and third base occupied and a 6-3 Land Sharks' lead, Theriault dug deep and fanned the final batter to score a Sharks title.

Cohasset begins a best-of-three series tonight against North Division superpower, Canton. The Canton series will determine the Eastern Massachusetts Champions.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE ALL-STARS

16-year-old-Division — Neven Bunstein and Greg Stevens both made fine showings and represented Cohasset well in their all-star performances.

17-18-year-old Division — The 17-18-year-olds begin a three-game series this Thursday at Harvard University stadium. Land Sharks who will be playing in the All-Star series are Chris Rolandelli, Nick Weis, Scott Theriault, Brendan Kinchla and Chris Kondrat. Congratulations guys, you all deserve it.

Jr. Skippers skate to 3-3 tie

By Kevin Lewis
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Jr. Skippers skated to a 3-3 tie against the Milton Warriors Saturday, June 2. The "never say die" Jr. Skippers rallied to tie the game on three occasions.

The game featured outstanding goaltending by Josh Ethier. He was supported on defense by Ryan Kimball, Jay Rasmussen, Will Moody, Jake Morgan and Tim Straughan.

The offense was provided by Greg O'Connell with two goals and Brian Lewis with one goal. Eric Libby and Greg Figeredo each had two assists. Chris Caron and Danny Williams also had assists. Will Prendegast, Chris Carr and Pete Whoriskey all played well as forwards.

Under-17 girls win Coastal League

Town soccer fans should celebrate the recent achievement of the Cohasset Girls Under-17 soccer team in being the first Cohasset girls team ever to win the Coastal League championship. Their first place position was clinched June 11 in a crucial 2-1 win over Kingston in the playoffs. Under coach Jamie Ross and assistant Chuck Endris, the team record was 4-3-3 for the season, with a 1-3-1 record in the first half, followed by a very strong second half record of 3-0-2. As a result of their first-place finish in the league, they also became the first-ever Cohasset girls soccer team to make it to the Massachusetts Youth Soccer League Tournament of Champions, held this year, the sweltering weekend of June 17-19 on the campus of UMass-Amherst. The girls did not win, but displayed the same winning spirit and pure enjoyment of the game that has distinguished them all season. Hats off to Ashley Brister, Catie Campbell, Emily D'Urso, Kathleen Fitzsimmons, Andrea Freeman, Andrea Grew, Emily Henderson, Rebecca Jenkins, Elizabeth Mahoney, Tammy Maitland, Cara McKenney, Megan McNamara, Andrea Mercurio, Danielle Nohe, Kelley O'Donnell, Megan Rhodes, Jennifer Ripley, Allison Ritts, Katie Ross, Jessica Snow, Amie Theriault and Elana Tosi for a truly great season!

Jr. Skippers blank Quincy

By Kevin Lewis
Special to the Mariner

The Jr. Skippers defeated Quincy 8-0 recently at the Pilgrim Skating Rink. Greg Figeredo scored three goals. Brian Lewis, Ryan Kimble, David Devito and Danny Williams each had a goal.

Chris Caron, Greg Ernst, Pete Whoriskey each had an assist.

The defensive unit was led by Josh Ethier, who earned the shutout. He was supported by the entire defensive unit of Ryan Kimble, Jake Morgan, Will Moody, Tim Straughan and Chris Carr.

Therefore, when you need to softly land a shot on the green, use a nice slow swing, flatten out the club and loosen your grip a little.

You cannot chip with the veins bulging on your forearms.

I'm a pitch and run type of player. However, there are other players who try to sky the ball and have it land on the green like someone tossing a water balloon on a Cub Scout parade.

Go with whatever works.

Putting

Bad putts lead to grey hair, ulcers and lost bets.

Therefore it is important to find a steady, reliable method.

There are a million grips, stances and clubs to use.

However, the best putting tip I've received is this:

After you've lined up your putt, checked the break, and practiced your swing, putt with your head down.

Don't look at the hole until the ball is on the way.

And if you really want to be cool, don't look until you hear the ball rattle in the cup.

Keeping your head down eliminates pulling your head and jerking your putts.

That's all for now.

Good luck and good golfing.

The summer's going by faster than a group of 6-year-olds chasing an ice cream truck. Football players are busy in the weight rooms and at the dinner tables, adding the necessary bulk to handle an 11-game schedule. Cross-country runners are praying for the cool weather and cursing the potential for Indian Summer. And soccer players, many still on a high after the World Cup, are counting the days until their first games.

We're gearing for the sports season with a combination of excitement and anxiety. The fall season for a sports reporter can be compared to New Year's in the real world. It's a new beginning, more games, coaches, veteran talent and younger talent ready to bust out of their cocoons.

Sounds exciting. So why the anxiety. All you have to do to look at our numbers and it becomes quite clear: Two reporters for 11 towns, trying to get to all the varsity coaches from each town.

Obviously Dave and myself can't talk with every coach, every week on a consistent basis. Not in 40 hours anyway.

In order to get to as many towns as possible we're currently looking for high school students from Hingham, Cohasset, Hanover, Abington, Rockland, Marshfield, Silver Lake and Norwell to work as weekly correspondents.

The ideal students would be sophomores or juniors. They'd have the opportunity to cover a team of their choice on a weekly basis to be published in the following week's edition of the Mariner. We see this as the best way to cover as many teams as possible.

Any student, athlete or team manager interested in writing for the paper this fall should call Joe Reardon at 1-800-649-6661 or 848-3144 by August 15. Your help would be fully appreciated. Give me a call and we'll set something up that fits your schedule!

—Joe Reardon

Ball skills make top players...

"Look at a sport like basketball," he said. "The top players have been playing one on one games or half-court games their whole life. Being out on their own with the ball is how they learned to play. The same is true in soccer."

At his camp, Anderson stresses skill work and the finer points of the game.

Conditioning and playing games are not as important to him.

"Conditioning is not important for a camp," he said. "The kids are moving all day and there's no need to just have them run all the time. We have several skill stations that players participate in for about 30 minutes each. Then in the afternoon, we have scrimmages but with only five or six on a side."

The skill stations stress footwork, juggling, shooting, defense and passing.

Anderson said soccer is a popular sport among the younger generation and will only continue to grow.

"I think kids growing up enjoy playing all sports," he said. "Soccer is just another choice. But the numbers keep growing and I think if it is kept fun, the players will keep coming back."

Anderson's last season as coach and school teacher at Cohasset was in '85.

He moved on to become head coach at Babson in '86.

"I went to school at Babson and the familiarity really helped," he said. "But it was not an easy transition going from high school to college. I was coming to a winning program that had suffered a little dip and I worked hard to turn things around."

Anderson, 40, graduated from Babson in '76.

In '75 he played center midfield on the Division III National Champion Babson team.

As a coach he has led the Beavers to the '91 New England Division III championship and a berth in the national Final Four.

Anderson said American soccer players are as skilled as any players in the world.

The recent World Cup (where the American team reached the final round of 16 for the first time) was an indication of that.

"Some of the soccer players I've coached or played against were as skilled as anyone," Anderson said. "The view that American players are not as talented as other players in the world is just not true. And I thought the World Cup was just great. It had a positive impact on a lot of people not used to the game. For the first time, Americans were seeing really skilled players at the top of their games. And even if they weren't big soccer fans, they appreciated any athlete who performs at the top level."

As for the controversial shoot-out to decide the World Cup, Anderson said he supports the concept.

"We were in the same situation as Italy because of a shoot out," Anderson said. "We lost the '92 New England finals in a shoot out. And like Baggio, our best player could not convert his kick. It is a tough way to lose, but our players felt we should have scored during the game."

Anderson believes the shoot out will have to stay.

"The World Cup might add some additional sudden death periods like we play in college," he said. "But at some point you have to decide the issue. You can't have players running around like that forever. Shoot outs are part of soccer."

Anderson's soccer camp runs daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. all this week and next.

There are no openings as the 300-player limit has already been met.

Cohasset's next and final meet will take place Friday, August 5, against Hanover swim team. The meet will take place in Cohasset with an award ceremony to follow.

South Shore soccer camp accepting applications

Registrations for South Shore soccer camp for boys and girls, aged 8 to 18, are filling rapidly. This is South Shore Soccer Camp's fifth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, it is suggested that you register at the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset town hall, or call 383-6791 immediately to be ensured enrollment.

South Shore soccer will be offered to both girls and boys the weeks of Monday through Friday, Aug. 1 to 5, and Aug. 8 to 18. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible.

Camp meets daily, Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area. Even though both weeks are optional for attendance, boys and girls camps are separate.

Only 150 openings remain for the week of 8/8 for South Shore Soccer Camp.

Team's, tight defense edges Scituate

Cohasset's 13-year-old travelling team beat Scituate 14-12 last week in dramatic fashion, rallying from a six-run deficit to take the lead in the top half of the final inning.

Three defensive gems in the bottom half of the last inning preserved the win for workhorse pitcher Jim O'Sullivan, who closed out the final four innings for Cohasset, while allowing one unearned run. The first gem was right out of an "Angels in the Outfield" script, and those of us who saw it left our shoes 18 inches below our feet. Andrew Ross caught the uncatchable ball after Scituate's power hitter cracked what appeared to be a sure home run to left field. Ted Goff then nabbed a bullet to second base and O'Sullivan finished off Scituate himself with an acrobatic catch of a cracked bat bloop over his right shoulder.

Someone once said, "sports don't build character, coaches do." If so, Coaches Schwerin and Andrade have been master craftsmen in a summer of adversity. Witness the second inning when Cohasset yielded 10 runs. There were no words of criticism among Cohasset teammates, who simply clawed their way back into the game after Mike Rossi came in to shut down the Scituate onslaught with pure speed from the mound.

Ben Smoot pounded Scituate by cracking three hits, walking once, and scoring four runs. Kyle Bunstein, Mike Rossi, and Greg Boyne continued to provide power at the plate. Bunstein plays with an intensity and desire to win that is contagious. Rossi can rip the cover off the ball and is a legitimate home run threat each time at bat, and Boyne, who gets better with each game, has consistently hit well all summer. Boyne was a perfect 3-for-3 against Scituate.

Sean Parkinson had an active and error-free night in the outfield. He has developed a very strong arm as several runners have found out to their dismay.

Alex Schwerin, in his usual quiet approach, was simply outstanding with both the glove and the bat. He and the versatile Ben Roine have demonstrated an ability to play any position and play it well.

Greg Parkinson forced in a run and then finished off Cohasset's scoring in the dramatic last inning.

Cohasset followed its Scituate win with a 2-2 tie against league-leading Milton. Both teams played outstanding baseball before the sun went down and forced an end to the game.

The team finishes out its season against Braintree, Canton and Hingham.

Church's tennis lessons planned

Cohasset's head count predicted to sink

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Cohasset is a tiny town that's shrinking, according to projections from a regional planning agency.

The Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) recently revised its long-term population projections for its member towns.

And while Cohasset's neighbors, Scituate and Hingham, are both projected to grow about three percent a decade through the year 2020, the final year in the study, Cohasset's population is predicted to decline about 12 percent over the same period.

Meredith Pickering, demographic and economic analyst with the MAPC, a regional planning agency dealing with transportation and environmental concerns, says a slight decline in growth over time isn't necessarily a negative thing.

"It's a sign that the community is stable and people want to stay there," she said.

And that's exactly what's happening.

Cohasseters are choosing to "age in place", Pickering explained. That means when the children leave the Cohasset's theatrical past is on stage this summer

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

As far as David Wadsworth is concerned, one of the saddest moments in recent Cohasset history was the day they sanded the stage at town hall.

"I couldn't help thinking that they were sanding Humphrey Bogart's footprints away," said Wadsworth, curator of the new exhibit of Cohasset's theatrical history at the 1810 Capt. John Wilson House on Elm Street in Cohasset Village.

The exhibit, which opened July 1 and will run through August, chronicles Cohasset's long love affair with the stage, beginning in the late 19th century when "Brass Button Avenue" was a mecca for the nation's top acting talent.

"Many serious actors, including the tragedian Lawrence Barrett and the famous comedian William Henry Crane, spent their summers here," Wadsworth explained. "Most of them were also yachtsmen, with large steam yachts in the harbor. In fact, Crane was one of the founders of the Cohasset Yacht Club. Because the captains of those yachts would promenade up and down Margin Street in their uniforms, it came to be known as 'Brass Button Avenue.' "

The area's renown attracted six brothers from England who have been called by some the fathers of musical comedy in America.

"The Hanlon Brothers based their nationwide touring company here," Wadsworth said. "They performed extravaganzas in pantomime that were unlike anything anyone in this country had ever seen before. The shows were too large ever to be performed fully in Cohasset, but they would rehearse segments of the show here and invite all the townspeople in to watch."

Other visitors to the actors' colony included popular minstrel shows and Shakespearean actor Edwin Thomas Booth, brother of John Wilkes Booth, the famed thespian who assassinated Abraham Lincoln.

Cohasset achieved theatrical prominence again in the mid-1930s, when the South Shore Players' Association, spearheaded by Yale Drama School

Water flow tests are underway

The Cohasset Water Department is conducting flow tests in several areas of town including King Street, Beechwood Street, Jerusalem Road, and Beach Street from midnight tonight (Thursday, August 11) through the early hours of Friday morning. Work is being performed at night to minimize service disruptions. Flow testing involves opening up fire hydrants to test the water pressure.

Residents who use water during the flow test may have brown water from sediment buildup. This is a temporary condition and is not cause for alarm, the water department said.

Register to vote

The last day to register for vote for the Sept. 20 state primary election is from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., Tuesday, August 23 at the town clerk's office.

For information, please call Town Clerk Marion L. Douglas at 383-9900.

Deer Hill plan ok'ed

The school committee voted to receive the Deer Hill School Improvement plan compiled by the Deer Hill School Council earlier this week.

School councils consisting of teachers, the school principal, parents, and a member of the community at large are mandated under the Education Reform Act passed last year.

The Deer Hill School Council met seven times over the school year to conduct council business.

According to its report, the council implemented some changes in the science department, increased communication of school events, professional development, and classroom activities, and monitored school administration policies and budget.

The council plans to conduct a formal needs assessment at Deer Hill and a language arts review, and to monitor the implementation of science recommendations. The group also plans to provide assistance with implementation of technology recommendations and to establish communications with its counterparts at the Osgood and Jr./Sr. High School.

Members of the council for the 1993/4 school year were: Maureen Jerz and Ken Ekberg (co-chairs), Ed Leonard, Donna O'Donnell, Debbie Neissink, Frank Deakin, and Bob Martin.

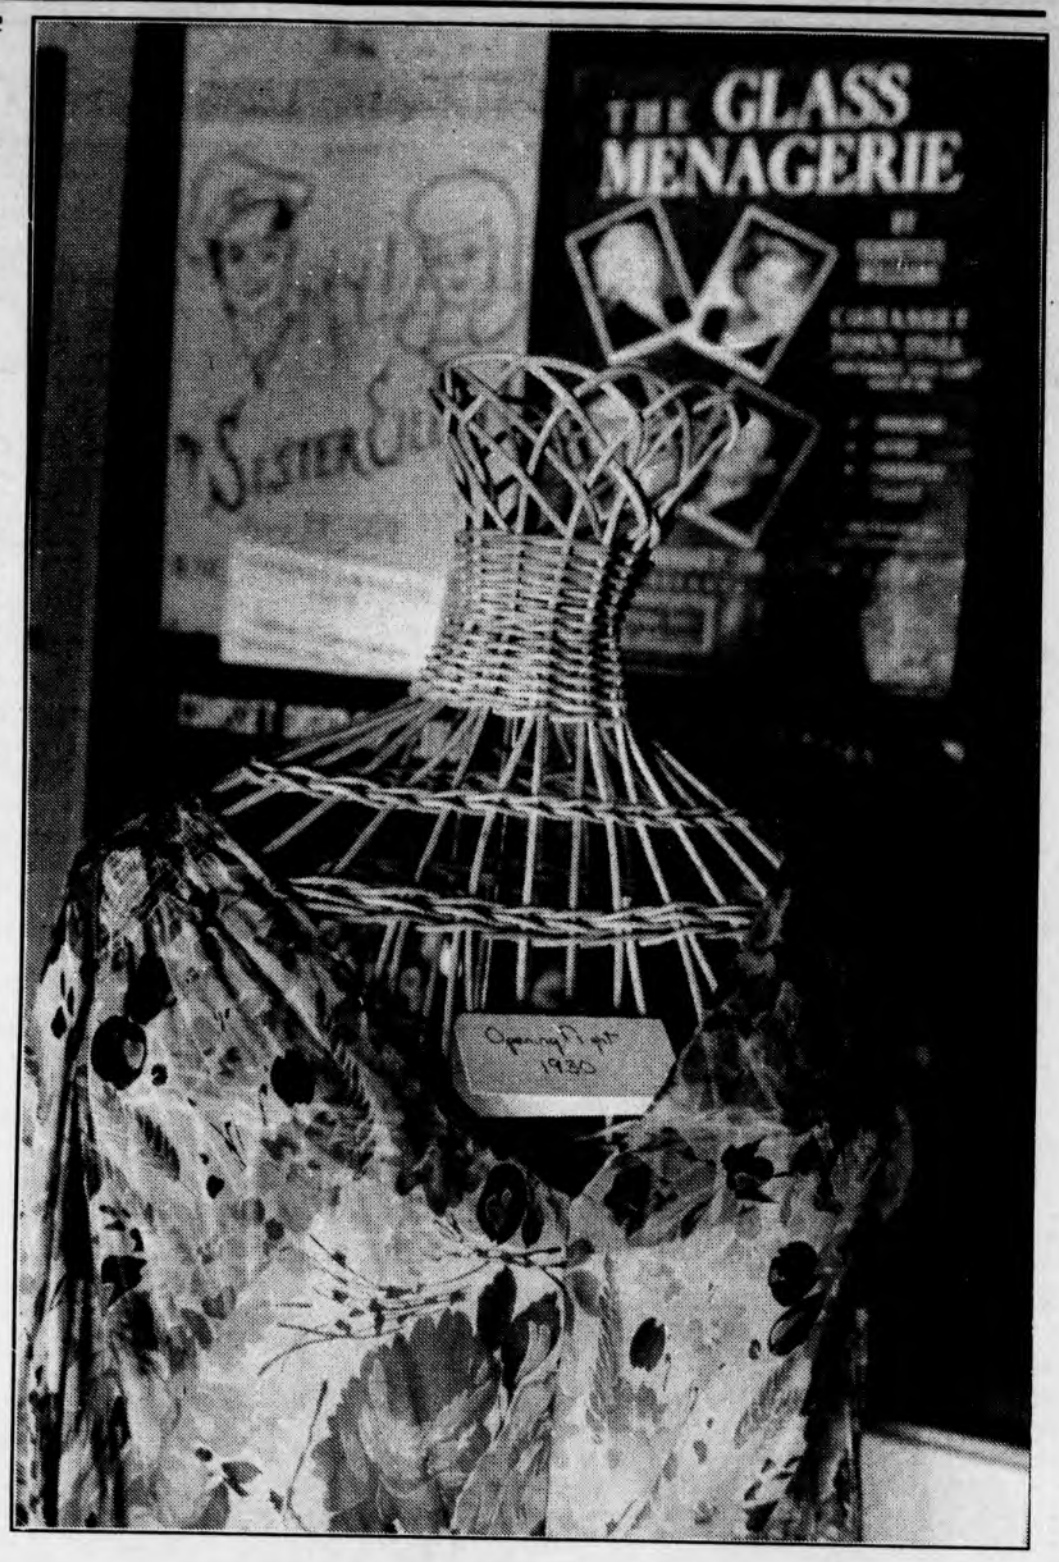
For the 94/95 school year, Martha O'Grodnik and Elaine Smoot replace O'Donnell and Neissink on the council.

School bids awarded

Beckwith Elevator will install the wheelchair lift at the jr./sr. high school. The company bid $22,749 for the project which was approved by town meeting voters last spring.

The school committee also accepted the bid of $94,640 from Engineering Construction of Hyannis to remove and replace oil tanks at the jr./sr. high and Osgood Schools. The school board had hoped to be able to obtain the removal and replacement of the oil tank at Deer Hill within the $120,000 approved at town meeting last spring but could not. Removing and replacing the Deer Hill tank would cost about $47,000 more, Supt. Stephen Hart said.

Hart said he planned to talk with town executive secretary Gregory Doyon and town accountant Michael Buckley to see if the school department could use monies left over from other projects to go toward completing the tank removal and replacement project. Hart said he would go to the advisory committee for the balance.



A dress worn by an actress for "Opening Night 1930" is on display at the Capt. John Wilson House on Elm Street. The exhibit features items from Cohasset's theatrical past. Admission is free and the museum is open from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday. For information, call 383-1434.

nest, their parents continue to live in the family home.

Although there are a fair number of families of child-bearing age in town now, as that group ages "we predict their kids will move out," Pickering said.

The MAPC used 1992 estimates of population from the U.S. Census, land available for development, migration trends, births and deaths, and building permit data to make its projections.

Over the past 30 years households have gotten smaller, a trend that is expected to continue, Pickering said.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said that while "no community likes to see its population forecast declining per se," Cohasset is a small town and that the forecasting is apparently based on a declining number of persons per household. He explained that the town does not have any immediate worries that it will lose state aid which is based on real numbers and not projections.

Selectmen mentioned the population forecast at their meeting last week. Selectman Martha Gjesteby, who is the board's liaison to the MAPC, said she would protest the projections. The board seemed perplexed that the town's population is predicted to decline while the school population is on the upswing.

In a letter to the board, David C. Soule, executive director of the MAPC said the projections are important "because they are used to assess needs for major infrastructure projects such as highways, transit lines and water and sewer systems.

"They are also used by the private sector for planning and marketing purposes," he said.

The MAPC is funded through federal and state grants and its member communities, Pickering said.

More time sought

Extending the school day, school year, and increasing graduation requirements could be all on the table this year as the school committee grapples with the goal of improving Cohasset education.

School committee member Jim Kirk suggested the board adopt an "umbrella goal" which encompasses improving the "breath and depth" of student preparation.

"One way to accomplish this is to lengthen the school day or school year, increase graduation requirements or teach more intensively," Kirk said.

School committee chairman Nancy Sandell said it is important "not to look at adding time on without looking at how we use the time we have."

Along that same line of thought, Kirk said he was recently cleaning his bookshelf at home and discovered his high school biology text which he flipped through finding that some of its pages were still joined together.

"We never got to the last 150 pages," he noted.

The school committee will hold a formal discussion on goals at its next meeting at 8 p.m., August 30 in room 10 at Cohasset Jr./Sr. High.

Shaw's to host open house Aug. 20

Zoning board mulls Shaws special permit request

By Sean P. Sweeney
Mariner correspondent

Despite hearing over two hours of explanation from representatives of Shaw's Supermarkets and another hour of comment from abutting property owners, the zoning board of appeals did not reach any decision about the special permit request at its meeting of August 4. As a result, the public hearing was continued to Thursday, Sept. 22, at 8 p.m.

Shaw's Supermarkets, Inc. is presently trying to develop a 24-1/2 acre parcel of land at the corner of Route 3A and Beechwood Street. The proposed development would call for the construction of a supermarket and additional retail space at the site which is now known as Cushing Plaza. The site has long been plagued by problems relating to its failed septic system.

The special permit request before the zoning board of appeals seeks to relocate the existing zoning line behind Cushing Plaza back an additional 120 feet towards Pine Ridge Road. If approved, developers would be able to concentrate construction at the site in the area where it is already developed.

Citing concerns of abutters, the planning board unanimously voted Aug. 3 to recommend the zoning board deny Shaw's special permit request.

According to Brian Leahy, the real estate manager for Shaw's, the supermarket chain has been targeting the Scituate and Cohasset areas for quite a while and had considered three sites. The group had considered one site on the Cohasset/Scituate line; a second site owned by Paul Barry on Route 3A, and the Cushing Plaza site. Since settling on the Cushing Plaza site, Shaw's purchased the property without any contingency clause relating to the acquisition of necessary permits. Consequently, the purchase involved a significant amount of risk to the group.

"We felt that we could offer the town a shopping center with an operable septic system. With the shopping center's present configuration, a working septic system can't be accomplished. We have come up with a plan to fix the system and seek your approval and assistance in accomplishing it," Leahy said.

Board members also heard from Shaw's legal representative, attorney Martin Healy of the Boston law firm of Rackemann, Sawyer & Brewster. Healy advised the board that current zoning by-laws allow for the extension of zoning boundary lines by as much as 200 feet in cases involving sites which are divided by zoning boundary lines. The Cushing Plaza site is divided into a predominantly highway business zone and a comparatively smaller area of residential zone.

Healy explained that a variety of factors, including topographical reasons, sewage problems, site layout and the effective reuse of the existing shopping center, are behind the group's request for a special permit.

Healy also stressed to the board that it is permitted to take into account the financial impact the granting of the permit would have on the town when deciding whether or not to approve it.

Larry Wagner, an engineering consultant representing Shaw's, gave the longest and most detailed presentation of the night. His discussion dealt with much of the same material he had explained to the planning board at its Aug. 3 meeting. Specifically, he discussed all of the zoning nonconformities which presently exist at the site and explained how the new site plan will eradicate all of those problems. He also discussed parking facilities, traffic flows, delivery practices, green space at the site, lighting and septic system plans.

In response to a question from zoning board member Mark DeGiacomo, Wagner also reported that he had met with a number of abutting neighbors from Beechwood Street and that some of the plans had been modified to accommodate the concerns of those residents.

DeGiacomo suggested to Wagner that it might be appropriate for representatives of Shaw's to continue to meet with concerned abutters and to foster a productive dialogue in order to reach agreement on some of the primary concerns of the parties. With this in mind, representatives of Shaw's could come back before the board with more narrowed issues.

Leahy also addressed a suggestion from the board that a smaller building could be a solution to the zoning setback requirements that are driving the special permit request.

"This present plan calls for the construction of the smallest store that we build. This is not a superstore. We are trying to accommodate as many existing tenants as possible," he said.

The zoning board noted that the planning board had recommended that the permit not be granted, but that selectmen support the granting of the special permit.

The board also heard from more than ten abutting landowners who oppose the granting of the special permit. The common theme throughout most of the statements involved concerns about views of the shopping center, excessive truck traffic on Beechwood Street, groundwater flow problems, noise, and diminution of property values. Many landowners said that they had relied when purchasing their property on representations that the zoning line would not be changed.

Only two residents spoke in support of the plan. One supporter said that this proposed plan was the most sensible and most promising proposal for the rescue of this struggling business area that had come along in some time.

Shaw's representatives invited all concerned residents to an open house to be held at the office building on the Cushing Plaza site. The open house will be conducted Saturday, August 20, at 10 a.m.

Cohasset's theatrical past. . .

graduate Alexander Dean, began producing musical comedies on the stage where a young Humphrey Bogart would leave his footprints.

"Bogart was arrested in 1934, along with his wife and another actor, on charges of drunk driving in Hingham," said Wadsworth. "His wife bit the finger of the police officer, Oscar Beck, who later became Hingham's chief of police. He carried the scar around with him for the rest of his life, and was very proud of it."

Besides Bogart, whose signature appears on a program in the exhibit, director Dean convinced both Sinclair Lewis and Thornton Wilder to appear in productions of their works on the Cohasset stage.

A roomful of cherished properties sets the stage for what the Player's Association was like in its heyday: playbills for lavish musical super-shows, still photographs of star-dappled summers with proud actors twirling before a well-dressed, appreciative audience. The exhibit even features two of the gowns fashionable Cohasseters chose to wear on opening nights.

The exhibit's richest source of information, however, is Wadsworth himself.

"I was working as an apprentice for the South Shore Music Circus, which is what the South Shore Players' Association became in the '50s," Wadsworth recalled. "We did musical theater in the round—'Carousel,' 'Paint Your Wagon'—I can even see myself in some of the pictures here. They had a standing order then that all of the extras had to keep their mouths shut during the musical numbers, no matter how tempting it was to sing."

All of the memorabilia in the exhibit comes from the Cohasset Historical Society's Helen Howes Vosoff archives, a source of Cohasset theatrical history Wadsworth says dwarfs what little he could bring to the Wilson House's display. Vosoff, a longtime patroness of the arts, left her treasures to the Cohasset Historical Trust in 1970, forming a collection Wadsworth plans to continue mining as the exhibit progresses.

"I never see an exhibit as final," Wadsworth said. "I intend to keep changing what's on display here every week.

Visitors to the exhibit are welcome Tuesday through Thursday, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Serving as hosts both of the exhibit and the Winslow House are Brian Duffy, Andy Hamilton, Bob Morgan, and Jim O'Sullivan.

Wadsworth isn't sure whether the exhibit will be around next summer, and encourages everyone who can to take this glimpse at a golden moment in Cohasset's history.

Collector's Choice was art lovers' dream

By Alison Cohen
Mariner correspondent

The South Shore's hidden treasures were on display last weekend. And what a treat for art-lovers who visited the South Shore Art Center.

Private citizens shared a taste of the glories in their personal art collection. The pieces spanned the creative impulse from circa 1000 B.C. to the modern era. It was a like taking a quantum leap across time, space and artistic viewpoints.

From the Olmec sculptors of pre-Columbian Mexico to the cosmically microscopic eye of Mark Francis, this show had something new, interesting and exciting to show to everyone.

Just how rich was this treasure box? When longtime art dealer Robert Vose of Vose Galleries heard pieces by Jongkind, Boudin, Daubigny and Zorn were on display he said, "I'm amazed to find pictures by them."

This collection contained artwork by names as familiar as cereal brands. Immediately on entering the gallery, visitors found two lithographs by Joan Miro with three Chagall lithographs and a Picasso linocut within visual range.

One Miro was extremely reminiscent of the work of his friend, Paul Klee. Miro's lithograph earned its name, Face Plate 1, from it's childlike circles and dots in black and red with a splash of blue. Hanging just below it was a loaner from a different collector showing us a stereotypical Miro. The crayon-box colors and fantastical shapes belied the morbidity of the title, Le Massacre du Roi.

A local artist contributed a mixed media piece called Tibetan Monks. The monks were rendered in gold line drawings on a black background highlighted by white and rose detail work. The patient viewer found surprises popping out of the lines like exotic birds, dragons and human figures.

That piece contrasted with Fernand Leger's Construction Worker. Leger's fascination with the modern industrial world showed in its theme — four construction workers on the girders of a skyscraper — and in its almost comic-strip like simplicity of line and bold use of color with lemon yellow clouds floating through the grey-blue world of the worker.

Another extreme of modern life came in the untitled oil by Mark Francis. This huge canvas seemed almost photographic in the clarity of its lines and shapes. Although not readily identifiable, it seemed almost as if the looker were viewing a common object through an electronic scanning microscope.

In one of those examples of happenstance, the owners of the piece revealed they had purchased it from the artist when he was unknown. Today Francis' work is on display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Tate Gallery.

One of the more valuable works on display was a harbor scene by Johan Barthold Jongkind. This moody twilight view of boats at anchor is typical of Jongkind's work. According to Vose, the 19th century artist from The Netherlands painted almost only harbor scenes. Today his work commands very steep prices.

The more contemporary oil painting of Boston's Public Gardens in winter time was another crowd-pleaser. Artist Candace Lovely maintained an art studio in The Fenway for many years and has been very commercially successful, according to Vose.

Like the Jongkind, Snowy Gardens was set at twilight. Viewers felt a chill rise off the painting that showed hockey players on the river while other people strolled across the lamplit bridge clutching umbrellas against the snowfall.

Two of the Chagall's on display, Le Bouquet du Nuit and Tribute to Eiffel Tower, seemed curiously familiar with his signature floating fairy tale people and farm animals and the central bouquet of flowers. The Dream of Pharao also seemed straight out of a Russian child's book, but had a different feel about it. Perhaps because it seemed more pictorial than dreamlike.

Eugene Boudin's Cows in Normandy Landscape was as appealing as it is valuable. With its motley brushwork, this cow painting would be as at home in a cottage as a mansion.

According to Vose, Boudin was a contemporary of Jongkind and strongly influenced the work of Corot, Daubigny and Monet. Although this painting was not part of his collection, Vose revealed that the first painting his father had ever purchased had been two Boudins.

"He was a terrific painter and his work is very expensive," Vose said of Boudin.

Sure enough, a Daubigny river scene waited just beyond the Boudin. This tiny landscape in a large ornate frame was quiet, dreamy and delightful.

An untitled wood engraving by Albrecht Durer showed the influence of his Italian journeys on the Northern European artist. Durer's central knight is holding a sword against the hem of a woman. A volcano is erupting in the background while death and destruction lies around the two figures.

Two engravings by John J. Audubon show off the ornithologist's talents as an artist and the artist's love of birds. The first presents two hooded mergansers while the second shows humming birds gaily collecting nectar from the lush pink flowers.

Audubon wasn't the only artist to fall in love with birds. Richard Sparre's acrylic, Cape Pine Tree, captured the rough and prickly textures of the pine and the glossy feathers of three crows in the top-most branch. Close by, the art show organizers hung a triad of bird etchings by Frank W. Benson. His Crows showed two birds nestled on a branch overlooking a field, in Ducks we saw a quartet of water fowl swimming away from us and toward the reedy river bank while the Seabirds wheeled in the sky looking for lunch.

Below those etchings was a Stow Wengenroth litho-

around town

by Sallyann Chatterton

Aug. 17 is a special day indeed for Michael and Joni Reynolds, they "tied the knot" on that date 20 years ago. We sure hope that they give us all of the details of their celebration afterwards, and that their day is a super one! Congratulations!

Had a nice note from Dr. William Matteson last week, which I will quote for you.

"Jeanette and I want to say farewell to a great town, a wonderful New England family life, and to a vast number of friends and patients, some gone and some still with us. We came in 1938, struggled through a depression and a war. We brought up two great kids, who were educated here in the finest of schools, and we wouldn't have had our family life in any other place. We're off to our second home in Fla. Sept. 1. Anybody — anytime — come and see us in Florida!"

It sure will seem strange not to see the Mattesons around town during the summer; it just means that you will have to pay them a visit when you are in the area.

Here's to a wonderful Floridian life; "Bud" and Jeanette, we wish you the best and want you to know that you will be missed!

Here's some good news about a family that is going to be moving back into town in September; the Bergers! Duxbury's loss will surely be our gain, welcome to all of you!

Bill Bacigalupo was spotted in our fair town last week. After several years in Africa he is back living on the South Shore. He is still involved in world-wide trade, happily married, and looking wonderful; be sure that you look for him.

Kara Kohansen, 12, of Cohasset uses her infectious smile to show her delight with such activities as swimming, campfires, and sleeping under the stars at Easter Seal camp in Poland Springs, Maine. Nurse Terry Williams accompanied her to camp as her personal care attendant. But Kara didn't need any help making friends. The lively seventh grader was a favorite with campers and counselors alike. Kara, who has cerebral palsy, uses a wheelchair and cannot speak. She's one of 250 Massachusetts kids with disabilities sent to camps in Maine and Connecticut this summer by Easter Seals.

Be sure to give Robert C. Abbadessa a round of applause when you see him! Robert graduated from U/Mass Dartmouth June 8 with a degree in nursing.

He took the state exam for registered nurses recently, and was notified last week that he had passed it. Robert is now hard at work at South Shore Hospital as an RN in pediatrics, you can be sure that he will be great! He was one of five men out of 78 to receive his nursing degree.

That's not all folks, his mom is also a nurse at South Shore. We'll bet that someone will do a great story on that someday. In the meantime we wish you the best, Robert!

Speaking of birthdays, happy belated greetings go to Brendan Mulcahy this week. Hope that your day was a happy one Brendan, here's to many more!

Finally, last Sunday a memorial service was held for Ron Rawson, one of the finest people that Cohasset has known. People came from far and wide to attend and to express their feelings for Ron; he touched many lives in ways never to be forgotten.

No one will ever be able to document all of the good he did for others; he certainly was a special man, and a true gentleman! It was a pleasure to know and work for Ron, he will be missed by all.

That's the news from here, please let me know what's going on in "your neck of the woods".

The Hearing Center
Have You Heard?

by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist

A FACTUAL ACCOUNT

Here are some interesting facts about hearing and speech disabilities from the Council for Better Hearing and Speech that may prove to be of interest: Health costs and indirect costs for people with communicative disorders are estimated to exceed $30 billion annually. On average, two out of every 100 school children suffer from hearing loss. Three out of every ten children experience middle ear infections that can lead to temporary hearing loss. The incidence of speech impairment is higher for males than females. These facts and figures may give us pause to reflect upon the notion that hearing loss and speech impairment are not uncommon. Anyone who thinks that he or she is alone with an impairment should review the facts.

If you suspect that you or your child has a hearing problem, it may be comforting to realize that you are not alone. Deafness is the silent epidemic. It is silent, painless, and invisible, yet more people suffer from it than from heart disease, cancer, blindness, TB, MS, and kidney disease put together. According to the National Institute of Health, at least one in every fifteen Americans are affected by a hearing problem. Today, hundreds of thousands of people who suffer from nerve deafness (sensori-neural hearing loss) are successfully wearing in-the-ear hearing aids. THE HEARING CENTER is a flexible walk-in clinic designed to provide expert hearing services for preschool youngsters through senior adults. Please call us at 1-800-339-9316. Our offices are conveniently located at 306 Washington St. (Rte. 53), Norwell, and 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3-A), Quincy.

P.S. More than three million cases of speech impairment are reported in the U.S. annually.

Alexandra D. Tibolt

Alexandra (Dupuis) Tibolt, 89, of Cohasset, a member of the Brae Burn Country Club in Newton and the Cohasset Golf Club, died July 30 in the Queen Anne Nursing Home, Hingham after a brief illness.

Her late husband, Robert P. Tibolt, was chairman of the board of Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates.

Mrs. Tibolt was a member of the Algonquin Club in Boston and the Rotary Club and a communicant of St. Anthony's Church.

She was born in Worcester and lived in Newton 30 years before moving to Cohasset many years ago.

She was a graduate of Forsyth Dental School.

Mrs. Tibolt leaves a son and daughter, Lawrence R. Tibolt of New Hampshire and Olive Mullen of Cohasset; a brother, Maurice Dupuis of Worcester; 12 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Arrangements for a funeral Mass and private burial were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Memorial donations may be made to Catholic Charitable Bureau of the Archdiocese of Boston, Inc., 49 Franklin St., Boston 02110 or to charity.

Edna M. Gannon

Edna M. (Tyldesley) Gannon, 81, of Cohasset, a hairdresser in Cambridge for several years and a teacher at Mansfield Beauty Academy, died August 5 in Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge.

She was a member of the Sixty Plus Club in Cohasset and Hingham Senior Citizens.

Born in East Boston where she graduated from high school, Mrs. Gannon lived in Melrose, Malden and Everett before moving to Cohasset. She was a graduate of Wilfred Beauty Academy.

Wife of the late Theodore W. Gannon, she leaves two daughters, Pam Grew of Grafton and Patricia Fitzpatrick of Cohasset; a brother, Albert Tyldesley of Harwich; five grandchildren and a great-grandson.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in Our Lady Help of Christians Church, Newton August 9. Burial was in Massachusetts National Cemetery in Bourne.

Memorial donations may be made to Alzheimers Disease and Related Disorders, 1 Kendall Square, Cambridge 02139.

M. Frank Knoy

M. Frank Knoy, a retired Assistant Vice President of Boston Gas Company, and former resident and town official of Cohasset, died in Costa Mesa, CA after a period of declining health. He was 96.

Mr. Knoy joined the Gas Company organization in 1949 and retired in 1963, having overseen the conversion from manufactured to natural gas throughout the Greater Boston area that took place during the 1950s. He had developed a gas interchangeability formula which permitted an economical conversion of appliances in several stages.

In Cohasset, Mr. Knoy was a water commissioner, was active in Rotary and the Boy Scouts and accomplished one of the earliest conversions of a large Jerusalem Road estate into apartments. The family moved to Costa Mesa in 1964.

A Texas native, he was an honors graduate of Texas Christian University and had been associated with a utility in Long Beach, CA, and the Gas Institute of Technology in Chicago, before coming to the Boston area.

He leaves his wife, Edna; three sons, Albert of Santa Ana, CA, Homer of Westminster, CA and Thomas of Mission Viejo, CA; two sisters, Catherine of Fort Worth, TX and Mary Ellen of Brownsville, TX; five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. A memorial service is planned for the near future.

editorial

For the glory

Although we're in the midst of the dog days of summer, our sports editors Joe Reardon and Dave McKee are already thinking about touchdowns and goals.

As summer winds down, they look forward to gearing up for the fall high school sports season with a mixture of enthusiasm and trepidation.

Our Mariner sports team loves writing about soccer, football, cross country and field hockey — but the prospect of single-handedly covering eleven towns and dozens of teams fairly makes Joe & Dave understandably a little anxious.

In Extra Points last week, they put out a call to any high school students who would like to work as weekly sports correspondents. The hitch is the work is gratis — without compensation — for the glory.

We need energetic, reliable reporters who can meet deadlines and get people's names right.

The writers will have the opportunity to cover a sport on a weekly basis and their stories will be published in the next edition.

We're optimistic that there are students out there who want to try their hand at sports writing. We'll give them a byline and they'll have the opportunity to learn about newspaper writing.

Many high schools have community service as a requirement for graduation and this could fit the bill. Writing for your community newspaper might also look good on a college application.

Businesses, like the Mariner Newspapers, are a great place for students to gain practical experience and to see if pursuing a career in the field is an option.

Any interested students should call 1-800-649-6661 and ask for Joe Reardon. If he's unavailable, please leave your name — and a time when and number where you can be reached — with our receptionist and Joe will get back to you.

We're also interested in expanding our coverage of youth sports but need your help. Managers and team Moms or Dads, who can send in short, concise stories about their players' or children's teams are needed. Our deadline is noon Tuesday for that week's issue. Remember to send us a schedule early in the season, so we can assign a photographer!

With your involvement, there should be much scrapbook material on the Cohasset Mariner sports pages this fall.

Straight talk on health care needed

To the Editor:

I'd like to make a couple of comments regarding the pressing crisis in America.

Before I do, a personal note. My wife and I are recently retired, were self-employed, and are Social Security recipients, in good health, but very angry and frustrated.

At all times during our marriage of 37 years, we asked these questions before spending or borrowing. The questions are not difficult since they are born of basic experience and common sense; and are as follows: Do we need it? How much will it cost? Where will the money come from to pay for it? I'm sure that in the vast number of households in America (and in the rest of the world) these same questions are asked every day. A separate question is how will this be administered?

Anger and frustration build up slowly as we watch government, at all levels, ignore the basic questions by which we run our economic lives. Elected and appointed people deal with us disrespectfully. They operate on the proposition, that the less we know about what they are doing, the better off they are. I am beginning to feel like a mushroom — kept in the dark and fed on manure.

Health care in its multitude of forms is perhaps the clearest example of how our political leaders think or react or do whatever it is they are doing to us. In the freight cars full of divine words, has anyone, anywhere told us how much the plan they favor today will cost us tomorrow?

When is someone from somewhere going to tell us where the money to pay for health care is going to come from? If the parasites and termites dressed as politicians and bureaucrats think they are going to tinker with Social Security or otherwise rob us to secure their ends — let them try!

They owe us the consideration of no more orchestrated media sound "bytes". They owe us respect! They owe us the duty to tell us all of the facts the first time out! Every congressman and every senator and every public official at every level, anywhere in this country, as a condition of holding public office, owes to the citizens of this country the absolute duty to serve the interest of the people of this country first.

Before they vote on health care, they have to know that we are not disinterested. We are not stupid. We have allowed them to treat us that way. It's time we sent a message — we will not tolerate being treated this way anymore. Politicians take note: When you say, publicly and clearly, that you will give up some special items of privilege you have; or will cut the cost of running the government by eliminating wasteful practices — then we can talk to each other. Unless and until that happens, loud and clear, you don't get our vote! Our vote is the light that only we can shine into the darkness in which they want us to live. We are not mushrooms. We vote! We know there is no fire burning except in the minds of politicians who are desperate about reelection.

Do we like it this way? Do we want them to continue to run things their way for their benefit? Or do we want political leaders who can be understood; who will tell it like it is; who will be concerned and answer the questions: do we need it; how much will it cost; and where will the money come from to pay for it and how will it be administered?

If we want responsible responsive people in government, then we have to do our part. Register to vote and vote. All of us who are registered should vote in the primary to let them know we are there; and, then vote in the election for the candidates of our choice.

If a person does not vote, there should be no complaints from that person. Our fate is in our hands. By getting lazy or turned off and not voting, we have allowed this crisis in the survival of our lifestyle to develop. By voting, we will ensure that those who we have elected and those appointed by them, will know that the people care; and they damn well better do their jobs and stop jerking us around!

SAFE meetings slated for August

SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) has scheduled open public meetings to discuss how to comment on the recently-filed Supplemental Final Environmental Impact Report (SFEIR) for the proposed 27.5 acre "Area V" expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill.

The next meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, Aug. 17, at 8 p.m. at the Unitarian Parish House.

SAFE invites anyone interested in writing a comment letter on the SFEIR to these meetings, where SAFE members will be available to discuss how to write a comment letter.

Interested persons have until Aug. 24 to submit comments on the SFEIR to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. SAFE urges all Cohasset residents to comment on the SFEIR.

Community Lights

Here is a list of some volunteer opportunities for Cohasset citizens:

• FISH, an all-volunteer group providing Cohasset residents with out-of-town rides to medical appointments, needs drivers. Drivers are needed for an assigned one-day-a-month or for occasional help when the assigned driver cannot handle all the calls. Please call Doris McNulty at 383-1886 for more information..

• Want to get involved in town affairs? There are some pressing issues that face the town and sharing your talent, enthusiasm and expertise could help a lot!

Selectmen are looking for people to serve on a new board called the civilian dispatch committee which will play a critical role as the town gears up for E-911 service.

They also need volunteers to serve as associate members of the conservation commission, on the mosquito control committee and on the cemetery committee. Call 383-9900 for more information.

• The Council on Aging seeks volunteers to drive the Senior Shuttle. The shuttle takes seniors to run local errands, to medical appointments, Sunday church services, and once a month to South Shore Plaza and Hanover Mall. Volunteers are asked to drive once a month. This is a great way to meet seniors, to help them, and to get involved. Call 383-9112 for more information.

The COA is also in need of kitchen help for its Tuesday and Thursday lunch programs. Volunteers serve food and drinks and help with set up and clean up. The lunches are fun, informal and ...good! Call 383-9112 if interested.

If you would like to water water and weed the new community garden at Wheelwright Park, North Main Street, this is your chance. The fruits and vegetables from the garden will be given to the lunch program, the food pantry and the volunteers, call 383-9112 if you have a green thumb or want to develop one!

• The Cohasset food Pantry needs additional volunteers to handle collection and distribution of food. The pantry, which is supported by local churches and social services is located in the rear of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Ave. next to Town Hall.

Anyone wishing to learn more about volunteering at the Pantry, may call Annette Sawchuck at 383-0050.

• South Shore Health & Educational Foundation (SSH&EF) at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth has many exciting volunteer opportunities to assist with fund-raising events, community leadership committees, research and data entry, mailing, and daily office support. Please call the Foundation office at (617)340-8856 and ask for Kelly.

• Volunteering in the communications department at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth may be right for you. Call Karen Berry, communications assistant, at (617)340-8302 if you can provide assistance.

• The South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society needs volunteer drivers to take South Shore cancer patients to hospitals for treatment. This agency operates a free transportation service out of a 'hot-line' headquarters in the Hersey House, Hingham and serves patients in Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull among other South Shore towns. Call 749-2535 or 341-4210.

Volunteers are asked to pledge only one trip per month scheduled at their convenience and are covered by blanket insurance and may be reimbursed on a mileage basis if necessary.

• The Social Service League's Friends' program matches volunteers for one-on-one visits with people in the community who may be physically limited, lonely, or isolated. Call 383-0771 or 383-0821.

• Compassionate human services professionals and other caring special persons needed to volunteer as facilitators for self-help parents' groups in the Weymouth area. These groups provide support for parents under stress who want to improve their relationships with their children. One evening a week commitment. Training and support provided. Call 337-7916 or 1-800-882-1250.

• Volunteers are needed at the community center (contact Stephanie Church, 383-0088); Meals on Wheels, (contact the Social Service League, 383-0771), Cohasset Consignment Shop (Andy Merrill, 383-0687), Council on Aging (383-9112), and Senior Shuttle bus drivers (383-9112).

(Please send your volunteer opportunities to Community Lights, the Cohasset Mariner, PO Box 71, Cohasset 02025).

Incumbent state Senator Brian McDonald (D-Weymouth), after successfully including $50 million in the Senate's Transportation Bond Bill for the construction of a tunnel under Hingham Square, is calling on Governor Weld to clarify his position on the Greenbush line. McDonald is a candidate for re-election to the Plymouth-Norfolk District state senate seat.

"The governor's recent letter to The Patriot Ledger leads me to believe he is now committed to the Greenbush line," McDonald said. McDonald noted that voters on the South Shore have overwhelmingly expressed their support for the project on two separate occasions at the ballot box. "But since his letter did not specifically mention the Greenbush line, I would like to have that issue clarified," McDonald said.

McDonald also is asking the governor to support the $50 million item for the Hingham tunnel should it be deemed necessary as a result of the environmental review process. "My interest in this is to move the project forward. If the tunnel is deemed necessary, then I want the state to make a commitment now," McDonald said. "If a tunnel is not necessary, then that money will not be spent," McDonald added.

McDonald also expressed dismay that T General Manager John Haley was not sure if federal transportation monies would be eligible for the tunnel in response to the Senate inclusion of the funding and additional language that would prevent the T from building any other commuter rail line until the Greenbush line was under construction.

McDonald pointed to a meeting March 31 of this year between himself, Rep. Frank Hynes, Haley's chief of staff Robert Mabardy and two regional representatives of the Federal Highway Administration, which discussed the Citizen Advisory Committee's recommendation to build a tunnel. "At that meeting, federal representatives maintained that under ISTEA, states have the authority within certain guidelines to determine how to best meet their own transportation needs," McDonald said. "It was unequivocally stated that if a tunnel is determined to be necessary, federal monies can be used for its construction," McDonald added.

"The real problem here is that the administration has other plans for this money," McDonald said. "If it's fancy or exotic, like bullet trains to New York or Springfield, the governor is there with bells on," McDonald added. "But if it's something as simple or mundane as providing South Shore residents an alternative to the Southeast Expressway, then that's just not quite glitzy enough to catch his attention," McDonald maintained. "That's what Haley really meant to say," McDonald added.

McDonald also said that he will be working over the next several weeks to bring South Shore communities and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, as well as other pro-Greenbush advocates, together to push for a stronger commitment from the administration.

"If there is no attention paid to the Hingham Square issue, those who most stridently oppose restoration of service will litigate this project out for years and may well be able to kill the project entirely," McDonald said. "The fact of the matter is, the South Shore has not received its fair share of state transportation resources for at least 25 years. Even with the tunnel, we on the South Shore will still be light years behind reaching parity with other areas of Metropolitan Boston when it comes to transportation dollars," McDonald said.

Bob Hedlund, candidate for state Senate in the Plymouth-Norfolk District, has opened campaign headquarters at 6 Crow Point Lane, behind Tedeschi's on Route 3A, in Hingham. Catherine Baker and Patricia Urbati are managing the office.

Hedlund grew up in Hingham and lives in Weymouth. Residents of the district are welcome to stop in the office to discuss their concerns with Hedlund. Information on office hours and campaign events is available by calling the headquarters at 740-4920.

"We have many volunteer positions available for what I believe will be an exciting campaign and an exciting and interesting election season," said Hedlund. "We see the potential for fundamental change up on Beacon Hill, the opportunity to elect legislators, like myself, who will be serious about welfare reform, fiscal restraint and truth in sentencing."

The Thursday Caucus, a statewide committee formed to identify, advise and financially support moderate Republican women who are viable candidates for public office, has endorsed Carolyn Van Tine, Republican candidate for the Plymouth/Norfolk District senate seat.

"Van Tine's call for ethics in government, teamed with her knowledge of the legal system, has proven to the Caucus that she will be a senator that the Plymouth/ Norfolk District can be proud of," said Thursday Caucus chairwoman, Senator Lucile Hicks (R-Wayland). "Her socially moderate platform teamed with her call for fiscal responsibility in government have already attracted a significant number of supporters within and beyond the boundaries of the Republican Party in her district," she continued.

Van Tine, a lawyer practicing in Hingham, describes herself as a Republican with a philosophy similar to Governor Weld's. In addition to her responsibilities with her law practice, she participates in the Lawyer for the Day Program at the Middlesex Probate Court, providing legal advice to those otherwise unable to afford counsel. Her platform is opposed to a graduated state income tax, over regulation of business and government corruption and waste. She has also received the endorsement of the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus.

William J. Forsyth, Independent candidate for state senate, spoke at the breakfast meeting of the Scituate Chamber of Commerce July 26 and met with businessmen and homeowners to discuss his fiscal and economic agenda in Braintree, Marshfield and Weymouth.

Forsyth noted a recent "Patriot Ledger" article, "High-Tech hopes," on Hull resident David Eisenhaure's company, saying "David's transition from defense contractor to commercial contractor is the first step for Massachusetts and the South Shore in terms of full economic recovery."

Forsyth said the incumbent's lack of interest and personal conflict with key advocate for the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, Representative Paul Haley, is destructive.

"The public's distrust for politicians, especially in the state senate and their ability to generate a strong economy can be seen throughout the South Shore," said Forsyth. He noted a recent "Boston Globe" article which describes the concern South Shore residents share about the economy. "The economic reality indicates a need for our next state senator to be knowledgeable and successful in their management of fiscal and financial matters. My training and experience has come from diversified employment experience and a solid graduate school education. The incumbent and former incumbent have shown no evidence, nor any ability to bring jobs and recovery to the South Shore," he said.

He plans to continue to talk with residents of the South Shore to gain a perspective of the economic needs of all towns and begin to work for solutions with local government leadership.

Tim Gage, the Weymouth attorney challenging state senator Brian McDonald in the September Democratic primary, charged that McDonald's vote in favor of a measure allowing the Massachusetts Covnention Center Authority unchecked control over $500 million in transportation bond money to site, plan and build a new center in Boston shoudl give voters of the Plymouth and Norfolk District one mroe reaosn to vote for change in the state Senate. "To commit such a huge sum of taxpayer dollars to a project with so many unknown variables without any review or oversight is fiscally irresponsible and negligent," Gage said.

An amendment was offered to give the Senate oversight of any money expended which McDonald voted against. Gage called the resulting unrestricted alocation of the $500 million for the convention center an unfortunate result of the usual political games.

The transportation bond bill which would fund construction projects and much needed jobs throughout the Commonwealth has been held up in the legislative process for months as the construction season passes. "Thousands of construction jobs have been lsot due to the delay. But, we had to wait while Senator Bulger crafted a plan to give his former aide, who is not Director of the Covnention Center Authority, a $500 million handout and Senator McDonald played along." said Gage.

Gage feels, "The need for new leadership and independent and reofrm-minded individuals like myself in the Senate is underscored by the activity that surrounded passage of this onerous convention center proposal. The way it currently works in the Senate, decisions are made based on loyalty and pressure and not good judgement, that is a dangerous way to deal with taxpayers money."

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The front gate was slightly ajar welcoming guests to Dori and John Golden's bed and breakfast "On Golden Pond," at 2 Bound Brook Lane. The white-picket fence in front of the home is bordered by a full bed of bright yellow day lilies. Birdhouses, crafted by Doris, hang from branches of the trees and birdbaths, antique garden furniture, statues, and fountains are sprinkled throughout the property. The swimming pool and pool house are set in a lovely private area and the gazebo is the perfect spot to enjoy sunsets overlooking Bound Brook. This area is bird lovers' paradise — remind your out-of-town guests to bring along their binoculars and fishing gear for their stay "On Golden Pond."

Runaway golf balls story doesn't make the cut

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

An investor in a newly-opened driving range on Route 3A said Tuesday that media reports of golf balls sailing over the net onto the busy road have been exaggerated.

Rosemary Analetto said she wasn't even aware of balls clearing the Cohasset Greens driving range until Police Chief Brian Noonan went to the range and told her someone "had seen a golf ball" outside of the area.

Police Sergeant Robert Jackson said the only complaint filed within the department was made more than a month ago. The woman who filed the complaint stated a golf ball nearly struck her car while she was driving on Route 3A, which abuts the golf area.

The police department hasn't received a complaint since.

"I don't foresee it as a big problem," Jackson said.

The two-month old business took action in preventing the potential for balls landing in the road by increasing the height of the screen and securing the greens the golfers swing from, according

With the work the HYAA Board of Directors are constantly carrying out on a year-round basis, it could eliminate one major headache by eliminating its current all-star selection process.

Rather than hold tryouts for the squad, a procedure I admittedly had never heard of until last week, the directors should have the coaches submit recommendations, complete with the players' statistics and positions. The directors could then lock the door, fill up the coffee cups and make their arguments for and/or against certain players as potential all-stars.

Tryouts should be held prior to the regular season, giving coaches the opportunity to see who has the talent to be selected to play in the league. Once the season begins, it's up to the players to put up the all-star statistics. HYAA Chairman Jeff Kemp was right on the money when he stated in last week's edition: "I believe it is unrealistic no matter how hard we try, that we will never disappoint a child again. It seems to me this is part of growing up."

During its next meeting the board of directors ought to seriously discuss and evaluate its current all-star selection process and make adjustments before the start of the '95 season. Pick the team based on the kind of season a player has, not on how he fares in tryouts. What more are the coaches going to learn about the players that they didn't see during the regular season?

Hockey fans should head on down to Elliot Goldberg's Pastimes sports cards shop this Friday evening, August 12, to meet Chicago Blackhawks' star Tony Amonte of Hingham. Amonte will be on hand from 6-7:30 p.m., at Goldberg's store. The establishment is located on Route 3A, across from the driving range, next to MaryLou's News.

Amonte is the second professional hockey player to sign autographs at the new store. The Boston Bruins' Steve Heinze signed several autographs at Goldberg's store last month.

It's my guess that the only South Shore residents that are in full favor of the Greenbush train line passing through their quaint towns are those who have to traverse Route 3A every day.

As if driving on the South Shore's version of the Autobahn on a daily basis wasn't bad enough, now there's the added excitement of dodging stray golf balls that clear the net at the new driving range in Cohasset, thanks to the Tom Watson flunkies who take aim at any car more expensive than theirs.

These are the same dim bulbs who used to spend their Friday nights at Star*Land trying to bean the caged vehicle that retrieved the balls from the driving range.

Sharks attack Canton

By Mike Rolandelli
Special to the Mariner

After downing Pembroke, Halifax and Duxbury, each in a three-game series, the Cohasset Land Sharks had to face a tough Canton squad to win the Eastern Massachusetts championship for the second time in a row.

The first game at Canton was not one of the Sharks best efforts of the season and a few costly errors led to a 6-1 loss.

Canton would jump into the "Shark Tank" the next day and Cohasset rose to the occasion, needing a win to stay alive.

Scott Theriault hurled a beauty, yielding only three hits. The Sharks really displayed power in this series — more so than they have all season. For example, Chris Kondrat hit two bombs in the game and David Leahy hit another. Grant Emde came up huge for the Sharks after some hard work on his hitting stroke and went 4 for 5 with 3 singles, a double, and 2 runs scored.

Game 2 was a very good team effort which ended in a Shark win, 10-5. The rubber match was scheduled for the following day at Canton.

Game 3 would decide the Eastern Massachusetts title and what a game it was. There were 10 superstars wearing Shark uniforms on this day and each would play their part and play it well in this team win.

The numbers speak for themselves — Sharks, 9 runs, 14 hits, 0 errors — in this one. Chris Rolandelli pitched the best game I've ever seen him pitch, striking out 8, allowing only 3 hits, 1 earned run and retiring the last 12 hitters in order. Chris Kendrat, despite a bum shoulder, caught the best game I've ever seen him catch. He didn't gun anyone down stealing (he couldn't due to his shoulder) but he called all the right pitches. Not to mention holding onto a ball on a play at the plate when a 6'0", 230-pound cleanup hitter barrelled Kondrat over while trying to score on a grounder to third. After the play, Kondrat laughed and the big guy got sick in the woods with an upset stomach. As if he didn't do enough, Kondrat spanked a 375 foot tape measure shot over the fence and onto the grassy knoll in left center.

Grant Emde continued to hit, going 2 for 3. Greg Stevens, Nick Welz, Rolandelli, and Brendan Kinchla each had two hits as well in a 9-3 shellacking for the title.

After the game, each Shark was presented a championship trophy and Kondrat earned series MVP honors as decided by the league president. It was truly well deserved.

Greenbush line, it seems as though there is a ban on certain songs being played within Hingham, in protest of the plans for the train travelling through their town:

• "Crazy Train" (Ozzy Osbourne) — He can bark at the moon and wear atrocious makeup all he wants. But it's that train thing that sets a bad example for the younger generation.

• "Train Kept a Rollin" (Aerosmith) — Sure he's from the South Shore, but Steve Tyler can take off any time once the trains are active. And he'll probably fly.

• "Runaway Train" (Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers) — Hypocrite! Last we head of T.P. he was learning to fly to avoid this whole mess altogether.

• "Last Train to Clarksville" (The Monkies) — And "Daydream Believer" was such a nice song.

• "Downtown Train" (Rod Stewart) — That's exactly what we're trying to avoid, Rod!

• "Party Train" (The Gap Band) — Why not spend your weekends at the driving rang smashing golf balls...but then again.

• "Ticket to Ride" (The Beatles) — Why take the train when your baby can drive your car?

On Monday, Aug. 8 at the Silver Lake Summer Basketball Camp in Kingston, I triumphed in a game of H-O-R-S-E with all-everything basketball player Amy King.

King, a forward who scored 1,000 points in her high school career at Silver Lake and earned a full basketball scholarship to Assumption College starting this fall, was beaten by a sportswriter who had entered "The Zone."

For those unfamiliar, "The Zone" is a when an athlete, be it a golfer, a tennis player or a basketball player, hits every shot he or she attempts-even those that defy the laws of physics.

Prior to Monday, I had never entered "The Zone" while playing basketball. In fact my high school hoop career point total is ten, only a 1,000 or so behind King.

But for a few briefs moments Monday, I entered that realm of magic and pulled off an upset of Olympian proportions.

Let's set the scene. During the lunch break at the camp, I got into a pick-up game with King and several Silver Lake girls' basketball players, who were all counselors at the camp. I was there to write a story, but playing a little hoops looked like a nice diversion.

After the two games, where I played only so-so, I asked King if I could play her in H-O-R-S-E. (H-O-R-S-E is a shooting game where players have to duplicate the made shot of another player. A miss gives you a letter. If you reach H-O-R-S-E, you're out.)

I figured King would not try to cream me that badly because I had written some nice stories about her over the last couple years. The last thing I wanted to do was get skunked. (Mickey Curley, who will play hoops for Boston College in the fall, was also a counselor at the camp. But if I played him in H-O-R-S-E, the game would have been over in five shots. All his and all dunks.)

Anyway, King agreed and asked if fellow Laker player Kathleen O'Donnell could join in the contest. No problem.

I started things off with a 15-foot bank shot from the right side. I made the shot but King and O'Donnell did as well. No letters.

After I missed a long range jumper, King hit a bank shot from the left side. O'Donnell missed for an H.

I eventually got my first letter after missing a King jump shot from the right elbow at the foul line.

But King quickly picked up her first letter after missing an O'Donnell three pointer from the right wing. We were all tied at H.

King banked in another shot and O'Donnell missed to fall to H-O.

It was my turn and I connected on a behind the back reverse lay-up. I thought it was letter material. But both players easily made the shot.

Then I reached into my limited bag of tricks. I tried a Larry Bird, stop at the foul line, fake the pass and bank it home shot. I missed badly.

But King liked the look of the shot and connected to push O'Donnell to H-O-R.

At that point, O'Donnell decided she had enough. I guess she didn't want to read about a loss in the paper.

After King and I each missed jumpers to fall to H-O, she went for the jugular as she took position behind the backboard.

King aimed and launched a shot through the basketball supports and over the top of the hoop. The shot was more than 14 feet in the air before it curled down and found nothing but net. She was pumped as it looked like a certain letter for me.

But suddenly, I stepped into "The Zone." I went behind the backboard, gauged the height and fired away. Amazingly, the ball found the hoop and I remained tied at H-O. I could have stood at that spot all afternoon and not hit that shot. But being in "The Zone," it fell right in.

King quickly rebounded to hit a 20-foot jumper to push me to H-O-R. But I could feel it was time for another journey into "The Zone."

I took the ball from the right side and as I drove to the hoop, threw it behind my back, caught it and laid it in. King hit the shot, but I could feel the magic working again.

I hit an eyes closed foul shot which King missed to drop her to H-O-R. I was on fire.

Then I ventured into three-point territory for a little Bob Cousy action as I launched a push shot standing only on my left foot that swished through the hoop.

King could not duplicate my "Cooz" bomb and fell to H-O-R-S.

Taking the ball, I stood at the right baseline at an angle behind the hoop and went for the brass ring.

From about 12 feet, I launched a high shot that passed over the corner of the backboard and rattled in.

King went to the same spot and fired. The shot rimmed out and the victory was mine.

It was the greatest moment of my anemic basketball career. I didn't ask for a re-match because I knew King would probably kill me.

I slinked out of the gym with my shirt soaked with sweat.

I was tired, but it was the good kind of tired.

Church's tennis lessons begin Aug. 15

The South Shore Community Center is offering tennis lessons for children and adults with Amanda Church. Church was a member of the women's tennis team at UMass-Boston and a former Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic.

Session 8 is scheduled for August 16, 17, 18 and 23, 24, 25.

Class size is limited to four students to insure individual attention.

For more information, call Amanda at the center at 383-9127 .

Camp accepting applications

Registrations for the South Shore Soccer Camp have begun for boys and girls ages 8 through 18. This is the South Shore Soccer Camp's fifth year of operation in Cohasset. If you are interested in registering for South Shore Soccer Camp, it is suggested that you contact the Cohasset Recreation Department, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall, or call 383-6791 in the near future to be assured enrollment.

South Shore Soccer will be offered to both girls and boys during the weeks of Monday through Friday, August 1-5, and August 8-12. Should a camper wish to attend both camp weeks, this will now be possible. In order to choose the week of camp you desire, early registration is advised as both camp weeks must be restricted in number.

Camp meets daily, Mondays through Fridays, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Cohasset's Miliken Field. The cost for camp is $165 per week and discounts for multiple weeks and subsequent children are available. South Shore Soccer Camp represents top-flight training, delivered by top college and high school coaches and players from the New England area.

to Analetto.

Analetto said a previously reported article about the seriousness of the incident was "overwritten" and failed to mention the positive aspect of the driving range. She said the golf range offers a "natural setting" and is laid out much like a golf hole on a course. Analetto went on to say business has been steady the past two months and is "optimistic" it will continue.

"It's a form of entertainment all members of the family can enjoy on the South Shore," she said. "We have very few balls going to the right toward the cars on Route 3A. Most of the balls land to the left."

Collector's Choice was an art lovers' dream

graph showing the desolate beauty of the Dunes.

Anders Zorn (1860-1920) was renowned artist in his lifetime and extremely collectible today. The Swedish artist also came to Boston to paint Isabella Stewart Gardner. The Zorn etching on display showed a young woman in a kerchief. The stark simplicity of its style and her direct gaze at the viewer hearkened back to the Dutch traditions exemplified by Vermeer.

The pieces donated by three collectors showed what an eclectic bunch art lovers are.

Vose came by his love of art through the family business. Although he retired from the gallery about 10 years ago, Vose has an almost encyclopedic knowledge of artists and wonderful anecdotes about them.

Vose contributed an oil by C. Arnold Slade. This Normandy landscape showed a rutted and muddy road with a skim of snow and drift of dead leaves cutting diagonally past a fence and the snow-covered roof of a cottage.

According to Vose, his father held three exhibits by Slade around the turn of the century and sold a significant number of paintings at each. Despite that success, Slade and his work seem to have disappeared.

"I've never come across another painting by Slade," Vose said in a telephone interview.

Vose also contributed one of the three paintings by Edna Hibel on display at the show. Although two of the three were fairly typical Hibels, his was an early, experimental work. When he asked the artist how she achieved the fascinating texture in Plowing Rice, she told him she had used ink in the painting. After it dried, she soaked it in the bathtub. As the painting softened, the ink began to puddle and run. Although it is a wonderful painting, Hibel didn't continue the experimentation.

Vose also said Hibel is one of the most commercially successful women painters today. Her work is on display at galleries throughout the south and southwest. One of the visitors at the gallery was overheard telling her companion with some surprise that a family member owned two portraits by Hibel.

Patrick Dudensing came by his wide-ranging collection similarly. His uncle ran an art gallery in New York and his father collected impressionist paintings. Consequently Dudensing grew up around artists and art work. He is a painter in his own right.

His many and varied tastes were on display — ranging from the realism of James Milton Session's New York tenement scenes to the Maxim Kopf's big blocky figures in Seraglio to the impression forest of Schwartzman's Rock Creek Park.

Dudensing also lent three pieces by Johannes Schiefer, a German Jew who fled Hitler's Germany to Paris and ultimately landed in New York in the early 1940s. Shiefer painted scenes of Vermont, Paris and Mexico.

His Barnard, Vt. painting was done with watercolor and gouache. This big cheerful painting shows a yellow field with the hillside beyond. By scratching away the paint, Schiefer dotted the hillside with farm animals and created the appearance of a farm and New England church steeple nestled at the base of the hills.

The two Long Island sound views show jolly sailboats and swimmers clambering on a raft viewed from a seaside home. The bright primary colors and splashy brush work are almost childishly innocent.

Dudensing's Simbari showing the turquoise Pier at Ostia and the double-sided Reginald Marsh egg tempera of two fashionable woman of the 40s show how far afield Dudensing's artistic tastes take him.

"I bought what I liked," he said. "The net result was something very eclectic."

Boston-based art conservator David Dudley also displayed his many and varied artistic interests. Dudley, who worked for the British Museum, also revealed one of those legendary tales of happenstance.

As he walked to and from work, he would stop and junk shops. In a junk shop across the street from the museum, he discovered two Japanese paintings, one of them by Utamaro. A third Japanese scroll was uncovered in a Gloucestershire junk shop where it was serving as a window shade. One of the three paintings cost him less than $10.

Dudley also collected photogravures by turn of the century photographer E. J. Curtis. Three Curtis photogravures of Native Americans were on display over the weekend.

"They are quite popular and very expensive now," Dudley said. "At first I didn't like them, but they grew on me."

Dudley's contributions to the show also included a cubist painting and an etching of a Drawing Class by Sir Jacob Epstein.

"If I see something I like, I usually buy it," Dudley said. Through his 40-year career in the arts, he has seen many paintings from different periods and styles that he liked.

The paintings and sculptures from Collector's Choice '94 have all gone home to their owners, but art center director Lanci Valentine promises a new and equally exciting Collector's Choice may be coming in 1996. If you missed this one, don't make the same mistake twice.

it's happening

Hockey great to appear

Chicago Blackhawk superstar and Hingham native, Tony Amonte will be at Pastimes, 132 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, Route 3A from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Friday Aug. 12 to sign free autographs. Pictures, pucks and additional autographs for $3 each will be available.

Mail orders will be accepted. Call 383-2273 for information.

Band concert on common

The 30-piece South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh, will perform at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday Aug. 16, weather permitting. The public is welcome which are free because of the continued support of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc.

Those attending should bring lawn chairs or blankets to sit on.

Walking tour is slated

The Cohasset Historical Society presents a walking tour of the town's historic Maritime area Sunday, Aug. 14.

The tour meets at the Society's Maritime Museum, Elm St. in Cohasset village at 2:30 p.m. Walkers will proceed along Elm St., formerly "Ship Cove Lane" to Cohasset Harbor. Homes of Sea Captains and Ship Builders will be seen. The tour then will go along Border St., past the three historic fishing wharves, then past the boatyard (once the site of Elisha Doane's tidal grist mill) to Government Island, itself formerly the U.S. Lighthouse Service Shore Station for the offshore Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Cohasset Harbor or "Ship Cove" once was the site of a thriving fishing and shipbuilding industry, and sites associated with that era of the town's history will be pointed out. Conducting the tour will be historian David Wadsworth, Historical Society Curator.

Admission to this summer afternoon walking tour is free. The Historical Society's telephone number is 383-1434.

Author to discuss writing

Hingham resident, Richard Bowker, author of the new novel, "Senator," will be at the Barnes & Noble Bookstore, 150 Granite St., Braintree at 7:30 p.m. Thursday Aug. 18.

He will be participating in a discussion on writing a genre novel with science fiction author Jeffrey A. Carver, fantasy author Craig Shaw Gardner and mystery author Chris Golden. Following the discussion, the authors will be available to sign copies of their novels.

The discussion is free and wheel-chair accessible.

Summer reading continue

There is still plenty of time left for children in Cohasset to join the summer reading program at the Paul Pratt Library. The theme of this year's program is "Ticket to Read". Participants keep track of the books they read and hand in reading cards to the library. They each receive a "ticket" with their name on it, and can begin an imaginary voyage to different countries around the world. The tickets are moved to various destinations on display in the children's room of the library.

So far this summer, 72 children have handed in reading cards. The program continues until school begins in September, and children may join at any time during the remainder of the summer. All participants are invited to a party at the library Thursday, Aug. 25, at 1 p.m., and all will be awarded certificates in school in the fall.

Participants who reach their reading goal will earn a free paperback book. So far, six children have received their free book, and many others are only one card away. Those who have already earned their book are: Christina Daniels, Caroline Henderson, Michael Martone, Margaret Pilczak, Tim Pilczak, Corey Steffens, Mark Chapman, Sarah Pease and Libby Meikleham.

Two Cohasseters are remembered

Service to town, state and country recalled

By Mary Ford

Dedication ceremonies are nothing new to state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. She talks easily and makes the family and friends of the one being honored feel proud.

But last week's ceremony was different. This time, the microphone was passed to others who were there to honor her and her family.

The occasion was the dedication of the Hingham Rotary and the bridge just south on Rte. 3A to the memory of two Cohasseters: Nathaniel M. Hurwitz and Philip G. Murray — Mary Jeanette's late father and late husband.

The men served their country in war and served their communities in peacetime.

"The location and visibility is a fitting tribute to Nate Hurwitz," said keynote speaker Gerard T. Keating, a life-long friend of Murray's family. "The spirit of community service was the cornerstone of his life."

Keating echoed the same remarks a few minutes later at the unveiling of the signs dedicating the Rte. 3A bridge to Philip G. Murray Sr.

A World War I veteran, Hurwitz served as state commissioner of veterans services and was a member of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars. He helped establish the Hingham Community Center and was a founder of Cohasset Little League and the Cohasset Youth Athletic Association. He served as a state representative and was a Cohasset selectman at the time of his death.

A World War II veteran, Philip Murray attended Hingham High, was president of Cohasset Little League and the Cohasset Youth Association, was active in the Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts and served as chairman of the 4-1/2 hour Cohasset Bicentennial Parade.

Veterans from Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, including 95-year-old George MacKenzie, a World War I veteran, were Boat house placed in historical board's lap

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The Hagerty Committee set Sept. 1 as the deadline for the historical commission to decide whether or not it would accept the $10,000 allotted to them from the committee to be used in the moving of the boat house from the Hagerty property to Government Island.

The motion, which was voted on unanimously at last Thursday night's meeting, is contingent upon the conditions that the more than 100-year-old boat house be used in a viable way and that the historic commission accept the renovation and maintenance responsibilities.

Members of the Cohasset Sailing Club are currently using the boat house to store their crafts and the committee intends to let them continue if and when the structure is turned into a Maritime Institute as requested by Jack Buckley.

The committee is also looking for a lessee to step forward and rent the Victorian house for $1,000 per month as part of a three-year lease. The house was the site of the Cohasset Colonials showroom. Because the structure is owned by the town, committee members intend to confer with Town Counsel as to whether or not it is legal to have the lessee pay off at least a portion of the rent by painting the Victorian house.

The possibility of having inmates from the Braintree Rehabilitation Center do the work was scrapped when officials from the center said the house was too tall for them to work on by ladder. The committee, though, is considering having soon-to-be-released inmates from the Plymouth County House of Correction do the painting.

Ham Tewksbury said the boat house should be moved against the hill on Government Island because it is the biggest building on the block now and would hinder the view of the other structures in the area.

The building is already eight-to-10 feet taller than some other structures on Government Island. That height could increase if the boat house was placed on

Hingham railroad tunnel has Weymouth opposition

By Tom Henshaw
Mariner staff

"We're pouring millions of dollars into the Harbor." said Weymouth Selectman Dave Chandler. "Now they want us to pour it into a tunnel. It's ridiculous."

With that, selectmen Monday night authorized letters to the MBTA and Governor Weld opposing the $100 million tunnel designed to carry the Old Colony Greenbush line under Hingham Square.

The expensive tunnel was recommended by the Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC) as a means of ameliorating some of Hingham's objection to restorations of commuter service on the Old Colony.

"It's outrageous to spend this type of money on a tunnel," said Chandler. "This is just a stalling tactic to keep the railroad from going through."

The opposition to the tunnel actually originated with the Weymouth Planning Board, whose spokesman, Bob Lang, told selectmen that his board "believes this is not in the best interest of Weymouth."

The letter prepared by the Planning Board said, in part:

"We support the reinstitution of a rail system through Weymouth to Greenbush (in Scituate) as an essential part of a comprehensive transportation system available to the people of Weymouth as in years past.

"With the support we also accept the

And with his long legs, the governor had no trouble reaching terra firma via the 30-foot ramp which at that time was almost perpendicular to the dock.

While by taking the commuter boat to Hingham, the governor avoided seeing the congestion on the Southeast Expressway and Route 3 going the other way — he didn't escape getting a sample of the mounting gridlock of public opinion on restoration of Greenbush rail.

Safe use of repellents

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee advises parents to use caution when applying repellents on their children. The Massachusetts Department of Health has recommended that the concentration of DEET be no more than 15 percent, pediatricians generally prefer that children use products containing 10 percent or less of DEET.

Parents are advised to read the labels on mosquito repellent products.

Report bug problems

Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee said mosquito problems can be addressed by calling the Cohasset Board of Health (383-9900 ext. 121). Serious problems will be referred to Plymouth County Mosquito Control District. The district will visit the site and monitor it on a regular basis.

In addition to reporting problems, the Board of Health office now has information packets available for residents seeking further information on the subject of mosquitos and mosquito borne diseases.

Nursing home payments

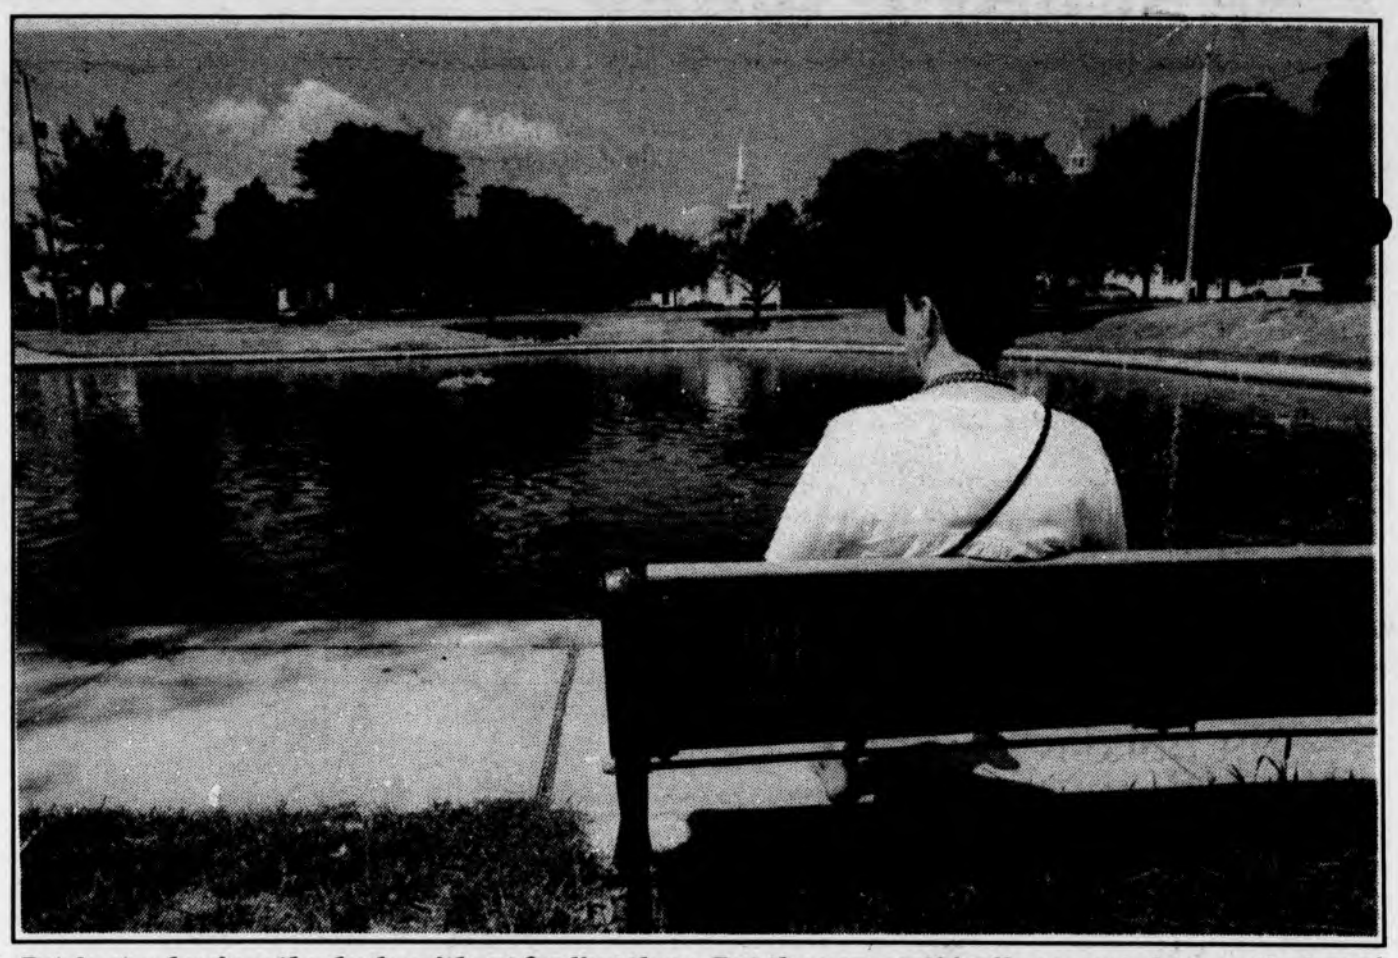
State Senator Brian J. McDonald (D-Weymouth) said the state senate approved $31,000 in Medicaid reimbursements for the Cohasset Knoll SN and R Facility for costs incurred during the years 1983-1990.

The legislation, passed as part of the FY 1994 Deficiency Budget Bill, appropriates a total of $72 million for back payments to over 400 nursing homes in the commonwealth.

"Receiving the money they are due from the state is vital to the operations of the nursing homes. I am pleased to see the commonwealth beginning to fulfill its funding responsibilities to these important facilities. It is a matter of simple fairness," McDonald said.

McDonald noted the senate bill also directs the Division of Medical Assistance to begin aggressively collecting from a separate set of facilities who owe the commonwealth for over-payments during the same period.

"The taxpayers need to know that facilities who have been overpaid by the state will be held accountable," McDonald said. A House/Senate Conference Committee is currently crafting a final version of the Deficiency Budget Bill.



Pat Anstead enjoys the ducks without feeding them. But the new aesthically correct signs on the backs of the town common benches may not be sufficient to stop the problem of feeding the ducks. Selectmen are looking into acquiring a free standing sign for the north side of the duck pond so people who approach the pond from that side can see it.

School lunch price up

School lunches will increase 10 cents this year to help cover increased costs, officials say.

The price for a lunch at the Deer Hill School and Cohasset Junior/Senior High will go to $1.60 and at Osgood, the price of lunch will be $1.40.

The school committee Tuesday awarded the three-year food service contract to its current provider, Canteen Corp., which was the sole bidder.

School Supt. Stephen Hart said the increase in price, which will add up to about $2 per month per child, will help cover increased labor costs. The school department provides the labor for the food service. An administrator from Canteen Corp. runs the program.

Hart said without the increase, the school department would have to absorb a $15,000 loss over the next school year. The intent is to have the program break event, he said.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

EXTERNAL APPEAL

QUESTION: The inside of our home is super (thanks to my wife). The outside lacks a lot (thanks to me). Will the inside appearance sell the home by itself?

ANSWER: Don't rely on the inside of your home "selling it." Your prospect may be turned off before he reaches the front door. So, look at the exterior with a critical eye. Paint if needed, Repair any cracked windows; replace loose shingles. Fix the fence. Give the yard and shrubs that "well cared for" look. It is not uncommon to see less than a hundred dollars of improvements and elbow grease increase the value of a house immensely. Remember, if the exterior turns buyers off, they may never see the interior

EXTERNAL APPEAL

QUESTION: The inside of our home is super (thanks to my wife). The outside lacks a lot (thanks to me). Will the inside appearance sell the home by itself?

ANSWER: Don't rely on the inside of your home "selling it." Your prospect may be turned off before he reaches the front door. So, look at the exterior with a critical eye. Paint if needed, Repair any cracked windows; replace loose shingles. Fix the fence. Give the yard and shrubs that "well cared for" look. It is not uncommon to see less than a hundred dollars of improvements and elbow grease increase the value of a house immensely. Remember, if the exterior turns buyers off, they may never see the interior on hand for the ceremony. Town officials from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, and Mary Jeanette's family and friends also gathered in the rotary island and later made the trek up Rte. 3A to the bridge.

"This is an unusual event," Keating said. "But the Hurwitz/Murray family is very unusual.

"Never in my lifetime has there been a father/daughter/son-in-law combination who followed the same pattern from veterans affairs to town service," he said.

Mary Jeanette said she won't forget this day.

"This was a special day for me and my family," she said. "I wanted it to be low key but I was pleased to see all the veterans.

"I'd like to thank Chief Borowski, the police officers, and the town of Hingham for handling the public safety issue extremely well and Virginia Gray for letting us use the Lincoln Sailing club Parking lot," she said.

Mary Jeanette also thanked the members of the house and senate and Governor Weld for the legislation to enable the special day.

Unemployment is up

The unemployment rate in Cohasset rose in June.

According to the state Department of Employment and Training (DET), Cohasset's unemployment rate was 3.9 percent, up from a mark of 2.8 percent in May.

In June, 157 residents received unemployment benefits out of a total local labor force of 4,021.

State-wide, the unemployment rate has hovered around the 6 percent mark for five months, dropping slightly to 5.9 percent for July. Massachusetts is staying just ahead of the national rate which rose from 6 percent in June to 6.1 percent last month.

Unemployment rates for municipalities lag a month behind state and national figures.

"The data for July — 61,000 more workers in the labor force, 58,000 more people working and 2,000 more employed — combined for a slight drop in the rate," said state DET Commissioner Nils L. Nordberg. "This is the sixth consecutive month that we have been at or below the national average."

Boat house in board's lap...

the original concrete blocks it once sat on.

However, other committee members said the boat house was the view and would be the most impressive looking building on the Island once renovated.

Russ Bonetti said the boat house would still be about 150 feet from the water — the same distance it is currently at — if situated at the hill.

Bonetti said it would make no sense moving the structure if it were to remain the same distance from the water.

"If it's going to cost us $3,000 to move this thing I think that's a $3,000 point," Bonetti said.

Herb Jason, who is also a member of the historical commission, wants the boat house moved closer to the water's edge in order for the boaters to gain easy access to the building.

Jason said he would like to see a short runway built as close to the water as possible for the boaters' convenience.

"You'd just need a short runway," Jason said. "If you go over where they're talking you'd be going 150 feet across grass."

Hingham railroad tunnel has opposition...

concomitant disadvantages such as traffic delays at grade crossings, displacement of business by new construction and higher MBTA assessments for our town.

"Every other town must expect similar gains and losses.

"In our opinion, the arguments for the tunnel . . . namely, close proximity to homes and the number of grade crossings (seven) are no different from those of Weymouth. The crossing at Weymouth Landing on Route 53 will tie up more traffic than all of the Hingham crossings combined!"

But most of all, the Weymouth Planning Board objected to the cost of building the tunnel in order "to mitigate five or six trains through the center in the morning and afternoon of one community."

"A large portion of this exorbitant additional cost will be charged to Weymouth and the rest of abutting towns and is grossly unfair," the letter continued.

"The vote by the CAC . . . was a compromise as the result of continuing opposition from the Hingham representatives who . . . implied that unless they had their way, they would delay construction indefinitely by court action.

"The vote was also qualified by the phrase 'but only if this (the tunnel) can be done with available funds and with no delays with the project.' Neither condition can be met."

Lang said the issue was brought to selectmen "because you carry much more weight."

Chandler noted that the Middleboro line of the Old Colony, which has not met the same opposition as the Greenbush, will be open long before the Greenbush.

"The people of Hingham will drive through Weymouth to catch (the Middleboro) train," he said.

"Maybe we should set up a toll booth at the town line to pay for the tunnel," said Weymouth Selectman Greg Hargadon.

He suggested that the money could better be used to fence the lines that go through Weymouth.

"The $100 million would be better spent on alternatives, like commuter boats," said Selectmen Peg Goudy.

"All Hingham is doing is trying to stop the Greenbush line," added Selectman Joe Piper.

Book launching slated

Wednesday, Aug. 24, at 8 p.m., Hingham's Aisling Gallery gives a book launching reception for historian Arthur Mitchell, author of JFK and his Irish Heritage. Mitchell, a graduate of North Quincy High School (1954) and Boston University, with a Ph.D. in history from Trinity College, Dublin, writes to answer questions.

His curiosity about the role of the Irish labor movement in the struggle for independence led to the well-received Labor in Irish Politics, 1890-1930. Having followed JFK since the first campaign, Mitchell wondered how important Kennedy's background was to him, so he researched and wrote his new book, the eminently readable JFK and his Irish Heritage.

Professor Mitchell first encountered Kennedy when his mother, long-term Quincy School Committee member (1952-1969) Alice Gallagher Mitchell, brought him to a coffee for the young Congressional candidate. "The room contained 200 ladies, the candidate and a boy..." and Mitchell's curiosity was sparked. Professor Mitchell taught at Curry College is now at the University of South Carolina. He and his Dubliner wife, Marie, and daughter Graine' spend summers in Ireland and he does research there. His sisters, Jane M. Croke and Betty M. Gerry, live in Quincy and Scituate respectively.

The Aisling Gallery, run by Maureen and John Connolly, features Irish Art and framing. It offers a great variety of classes (Gaelic; tin whistle, harp, fiddle and bodhran playing; literature, and art lessons). It also sponsors many lively concerts and cultural events.

ponents by getting on board the Sterling at Rowe's Wharf for the 35-minute ride during which where they were able to present their case to the governor.

Martha Reardon, a water transportation expert, also grabbed the moment to argue on why ferries are a good and all too "under-studied" alternative to rail restoration.

But the politically-astute governor didn't try to test the waters in the election season. He would not comment on whether or not he would support Greenbush on his arrival. He said he would wait for the environmental review to be complete before he takes a stand.

Carillon concert Sunday

The Seventieth Annual Carillon Recital Series in Cohasset will continue Sunday, Aug. 21, at 6 p.m., with a concert by Beverly Buchanan, carillonneur at Belmont University, Nashville, Tenn.

Buchanan received degrees in music from the University of Michigan, where she studied carillon with the late Percival Price. She has concertized extensively in North America, and has compiled and edited several collections of carillon music. Her Sunday program will include carillon compositions by Leen 't Hart, Hugo Melin, and Johan Franco, arrangements of show tunes, hymns and folk music, and a transcription of the waltz "Tales from the Vienna Woods" of Johann Strauss Jr.

The 57-bell Taylor carillon is located in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, and may be heard to best advantage from the listening places recommended on the back of the printed program. Copies of the program may be obtained on Cohasset Common or in the church courtyard on Highland Ave. Picnic suppers, lawn chairs, and blankets are welcome at all listening locations. In case of rain, hear the bells from your parked car. Following the recital, all wishing to see the instrument may climb the 45 stairs to the playing area for a demonstration of the unusual console with its rows of hand-levers and pedals (meet at the Highland Ave. entrance).

For further information, call the church office weekdays at 617/383-1083, or Sally Slade Warner, the church carillonneur at 508/475-2599, or assistant carillonneur Mary Kennedy at 617/383-9599.

September clambake set

September clambake is slated. It's sponsored by the Harbor Island League, Inc., a non-profit organization devoted to the preservation and maintenance of the historical and physical features of the Boston Harbor Islands.

Plan now to bring your friends and family and enjoy beautiful Nantasket beach. The ocean views are spectacular and our old-fashioned clambake will bring back unforgettable memories of years past, Sunday, Sept. 21, 1 to 4 p.m., at Nantasket/Hull Shore Drive extension HRA property.

For complete menu and ticket information call 925-4794.

Meals on wheels walk

South Shore Elder Services announces its annual Walk-A-Thon for the Meals on Wheels program Sunday, Sept. 18, at 11:30 a.m.

Registration is from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. The walk will begin at the Braintree town hall and continue onto the track field of Thayer Academy in Braintree.

All funds raised are used to provide meals to those elders who are alone on Thanksgiving and Christmas Day.

This year's walk is the kick-off to the Braintree Multi-Cultural Festival. The festival will take place from noon to 6 p.m. Some scheduled events that day: International food booths, music, ethnic dancers in costume, crafts, health fair, and more.

Hats off to Angela Parisi who was named to the South Shore Vocational Technical High School honor roll for the third trimester. The regional school serves students from Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman, as well as students from a few surrounding communities. Angela will be a sophomore in the fall; keep up the good work.

Please welcome Brendan Daniel Sullivan, born July 19, at South Shore Hospital. Brendan was born at 9:01 a.m. and weighed 7 lbs. 7 ozs. Mom and dad, Gerda and Michael, are thrilled as are Christopher (age 5-1/2) and Michael (age 3-1/2), Brendan's brothers. It goes without saying that his grandparents are happy too. Maternal grandparents are James and Maria Cahill, paternal grandparents are Frank and Dorothy Sullivan. It is really hard to have a brand new baby in the midst of a heat wave, lucky that mom has all that help! Congratulations.

Eric Anderson, grandson of Sally Anderson of Linden Dr., came all the way from Portland, Oreg., to win first prize in "The Most Patriotic Bicycle Competition" in the Hingham 4th of July parade. This was a most appropriate birthday present to his grandmother who was born on the 4th of July! Way to go, Eric!

Middlebury College sends us word of three Cohasset scholars! Rebecca A. Kirk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Kirk, has attained dean's list status for the spring term, as did Kristin K. Martin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John D. Martin Jr. Stephen M. Pozatek, son of Dr. and Mrs. Zigmunt W. Pozatek, has been named a college scholar, the highest recognition for academic achievement for the spring term at Middlebury College. We applaud all of you and know that you will keep up the good work.

Everyone remembers how hot it was a couple of weeks ago, just walking dr sweat to the brow! Well, that was the week that Chloe Chittick and Emily Collins were at Worcester Poly Institute at field hockey camp! And, based on their skills, performance and attitude, they were both chosen to be all-stars.

Emily is a sophomore and Chloe a junior at CHS; Chloe is a captain of the CHS field hockey team, you can be sure that they will have an outstanding team. And, double sessions will be a "piece of cake" for Emily and Chloe, no matter what the temperature.

Congratulations to both of you, it is nice to see hard work pay off.

Michael W. Meers, son of Bob and Carol Meers, was among 552 candidates for graduation from the University of Mississippi at the conclusion of the summer term. Mike earned a bachelor of business administration degree, and we wish him the best as he ventures into the business world.

Katherine V. Andrews is looking forward to fall, that is when she will be heading to The Tisch School at New York University. Katherine graduated from Phillips Academy in June with honors in theater (she also made the honor roll for the senior spring term). Katherine attended Cohasset High School prior to attending Phillips Academy, and is the daughter of Frances and Horace Andrews.

Sean Peter Campbell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Campbell of Jerusalem Rd., was among the 195 members of the Keep us informed about your college life, Sean.

News comes from the University of Massachusetts Amherst, where more than 4,000 students received undergraduate degrees in May.

Scholars from our town that were recipients were Charlotte N. Begley of 455 Beechwood St. (Bachelor of Arts); Peter J. Buckley, 26 Old Coach Rd. (Bachelor of Arts); Laurel A. Collins, 404 South Main St. (Bachelor of Arts); and David A. Hanlon, 79 Beechwood St. (Bachelor of Arts).

We are proud of all of you, and wish you successful futures in your chosen fields!

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Jonah Berger this week. Jonah celebrated his 17th birthday, we hope it was a happy one!

Ellery Clark received good news from London last week. This shareholder of the Arsenal Football Club of London won the European Cup Winner's Cup for the first time ever. The Gunners scored 17 goals against only three in the protracted competition. More than 10,000 arsenal supporters attended the final game cheering the British team onto international victory.

Philip G. Tedeschi and Judith A. (Murray) Tedeschi of 7 Parker Ave. send us great news this week. They are pleased to announce the birth of Elisa Rose Tedeschi, born July 20 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. The proud grandparents are Robert and Judith Murray. We all give a Cohasset welcome to Elisa.

Don't forget folks, the Cohasset Food Pantry needs you! Additional volunteers are wanted to handle collection and distribution of food, and also will gladly accept any donations that you might give! Supported by local churches and social services, it is in the rear of the Second Congregational Church. Become a part of it by calling Annette Sawchuck at 383-0050.

Congratulations go to Judy A. Tedeschi (again) this week. Judy will be Pilgrim Health Care's advertising program administrator in the advertising and public relations department for Pilgrim Health Care. She surely will be one busy lady.

Finally, news from the "oops" department. Remember last week we wrote about Robert C. Abbadessa and his nursing degree? Well, he is an RN in orthopedics, not pediatrics, as was reported. Sorry about that, Robert!

Frederic H. Wood, Jr.

A memorial service for Frederic H. Wood, Jr. will be held at 2 p.m., Sunday, August 21 at St. Stephens Episcopal Church. Mr. Wood lived in Cohasset many years and was the owner of Petersen Realtors and Petersen Insurance Agency, before retiring seven years ago for health reasons at which time he moved to Sarasota, FL. He was 60 years old.

He was a graduate of Cohasset High School and attended Boston University. He was a veteran of the U.S. Air Force.

He was a former Cub Scout pack master, past president of the Cohasset Historical Society and past president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. He was also a member of the Konohasset Masonic Lodge.

He leaves his wife, Sally (Parker) Wood of Sarasota, FL; a daughter Nancy Wood of Anna Maria, FL; two sons, Mark H. Wood of Camarillo, CA; and Frederic H. Wood III of Tampa, FL. Five grandchildren, Sarah and Mark, Jr. of Camarillo; Justin and Tyler of Tampa; and Joshua Mark (Jake) Wood of Anna Maria, FL. He also leaves two brothers Peter J. Wood and Harold E. Coughlin of Cohasset.

Memorial donations may be made to the Neural Regeneration and Transplantation Foundation, C/O Dr. Thomas Freeman, 4 Columbia Drive, #730, Tampa, FL 33600.

Vito Conte

A funeral Mass for Vito Conte will be celebrated at 10 a.m. tomorrow (August 19) in St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be in Woodside Cemetery.

Mr. Conte, 67, of Barefoot Way, Fla., a retired material and supply supervisor for the federal government and a World War II Veteran died August 10 in Sebastian River Medical Center in Roseland, Fla.

Visiting is from 7 to 9 p.m. tonight (August 18) in McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St.

Cabinet Day

Whether our Governor likes it or not, he's a star.

National magazines like Vanity Fair are getting ready to write him up. And who can blame them.

Mr. Weld is a handsome Republican in a liberal state where not so long ago, electable members of the GOP were as rare as hen's teeth.

Last week, South Shore citizens had what has been an infrequent chance to see the governor up close and personal.

Mr. Weld and his team held 'Cabinet Day" on the South Shore to positive reviews from local citizens hailing from Stoughton to Marshfield.

We saw the governor trying his hand at clam digging in Weymouth and softball in Hull. He toured businesses, made announcements, and presented a heroism award to two Environmental Police officers at the Hingham Shipyard. Members of the governor's cabinet crisscrossed our towns as well giving citizens the chance to put a face with names like Elder Affairs Secretary Franklin Olliverre and Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe.

But in addition to great publicity, we hope the governor and his team took back with them a clear message that the South Shore has needs which must be met.

At an editorial board meeting with Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci at the Mariner Newspapers headquarters in Marshfield, we made it crystal clear that we look toward the Weld administration for a commitment to our region.

Transportation is more than a commuting issue in our readership area. If we are going to thrive and move forward into the 21st century, we can't be cut off from everywhere else by clogged roads and an inadequate mass transit system.

Our harbors desperately need dredging. At a dredging summit in Cohasset recently, local officials sat incredulously as state and federal agencies spelled out a permitting process so complex that some towns must opt to hire a consultant to walk them through it.

These are just examples of two critical areas where the governor's office can help with support, expertise, and most of all leadership.

There's no doubt the governor scored points last week. But we'll be watching his administration closely to see if those turn into home runs for the South Shore.

Response to landfill report urged

letters

To the Editor:

Once again it is time to move to the typewriters and keyboards, pen and stationery! It's the dog days; that old dog Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) is back. And we've got till Aug. 24 to respond.

Yes, I know we all thought we had killed the threat after our electrifying public showing of opposition in February and after the decision of the Secretary of Environmental Affairs last spring rejecting the Final Env. Impact Report. Well welcome to the work of the politics and the insiders. CHL has submitted a supplement to the FEIR which constitutes its response to public comments and the Certificate from the Secretary. It seems CHL's position is, any response — no matter how inadequate — is acceptable. So this latest version of inadequate responses is supposed to be fine and this will let the approval process move on.

The purpose of the MEPA process is fact finding and the facts are clear: the present site has problems; is impacting the surrounding habitat, is leaking leachate into conservation land and does smell bad. CHL is only now (after nine years) backing into agreement on these points but contends that the new expansion will make all these problems go away and it will become an asset for the town. (And if you believe that I've got a bridge in NY for you.)

We must continue to fight for our rights. — Read the Supplement (there are copies at the Hull, Hingham and Cohasset Health Departments, Cohasset Town Hall and the Library), you'll find newly re-hashed arguments, not new information. Attend a SAFE open meeting Wednesday night at the Parish House or the Public Meeting Aug. 22 at the Chart House. This process requires a letter of comment to the Secretary of Env. Affairs in Boston, say all the same things you said before — ask for a rejection of the SFEIR!

CHL is trying an end run past the public, it needs to get into the DEP hearings and we can stop them this time. Why did they decide to spring this supplement on us in August, in the dog days? Because this dog can't run.

Deadline for comment looms

To the Editor:

I am writing to alert my fellow citizens of an important issue now pending in Cohasset. This issue is the Aug. 24 deadline for public comment regarding the proposed expansion of the privately owned, for-profit landfill, Cohasset Heights Ltd.

Believe it or not, Cohasset Heights has filed yet another proposal with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs in hopes of being able to proceed with its expansion. Obtaining the expansion would be a devastating loss for Cohasset thus again forcing the town to expend large sums of money on attorneys and environmental consultants in order to protect the town's interests.

Please exercise your civic responsibility and communicate your concerns to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

S.A.F.E. schedules hearing

SAFE will hold a public hearing on the proposed expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill. The public hearing is 7:30 p.m., Monday, Aug. 22, at the Chart House Restaurant on Cohasset Harbor. All citizens are invited. A special invitation has been extended to state environmental officials and Gov. Weld.

"We are disappointed that the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs has refused to hold a hearing on this report. The residents of Cohasset deserve an opportunity to speak out on this important issue," said Linda Keller, president of SAFE.

"Last spring's public hearing was a turning point for Cohasset because it became clear to the state that this was much more than a NIMBY issue. Numerous issues were highlighted with both verbal and visual testimony. It was easy for the state to do the right thing and reject the FEIR."

SAFE urges all citizens who are concerned about our water supply and public health to attend this meeting and to send a strong message to the state to reject this application.

For more information, call Linda Keller at 383-6873, or John McNabb at 383-6202.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

Overlooking the Cohasset Yacht Club, "Actor's Row," a rambling cape dating back to 1840, offers guests a beautiful, serene spot to enjoy a long and lovely visit to Cohasset. With its own swimming pool, jacuzzi and tennis court surrounded by sprawling lawns, flowering trees and gardens — you might consider letting the guests stay at your home and checking out Actor's Row yourself. The front porch has comfortable wicker furniture to curl up on and read that summertime fiction under the paddle fans. The flower boxes along the front porch railing are brimming with fuchsia and violet & white geraniums. The front steps are bordered by a bed of white alyssum, blue ageratum, pink & red begonias, and pink & white impatiens along with purple balloon flower, A magnificent old-fashioned white rose bush spills over the front white picket fence complementing the pale pink color of the house and the gold-leafed quarterboard announcing "Actor's Row." The Innkeepers, Maggie and Dick Tibbetts, would be more than happy to drop a brochure in the mail so you can share this Cohasset treasure with your Thanksgiving guests.

Civil War soldiers aren't forgotten

Steve Wigmore, commander of the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118, Veterans Agent Noel Ripley, and Tom Wigmore of the Sons of the American Legion pose by the gravestone which was re-carved thanks to a grant from the state Veterans Administration.

(Staff photo/ Mary Ford)

Thanks to a grant from the state Veterans Services Administration, a marble gravestone in the Central Cemetery now clearly depicts the names of two Cohasset brothers who died within a week of each other in the Civil War.

Marble stones, popular in the mid-19th century are being eaten away by acid rain. Marble, which could be elaborately carved, followed the slate stones and was succeed by granite which is more resilient.

Veterans agent Noel Ripley said he doesn't know if the brothers are actually buried at the site.

Bela Bates, 22, was one of nearly 6,000 killed at Cedar Creek on Oct. 19, 1864, and Caleb Bates, 20, was wounded at Bear Creek and died a few days later in a field hospital.

"In the Civil War, the only dog tag soldiers had was in the back of their coat," Ripley said. "It was pretty hard to find them."

The men, who lived on Elm Street, made a cask of wine from their grape arbor and hid it to be opened in celebration when they came home from the war, Ripley said. The cask was never found.

Civil War veteran Sgt. Levi G. Gaylord, a Congressional Medal of Honor recipient, is also buried at Central Cemetery, which is nestled between Joy Place and Little Harbor.

Last summer, volunteers started an inventory of all gravestones in the historic cemetery, which has markers dating back to the early 1700s.

Central Cemetery is overseen by a board of trustees.

The Hearing Center
Have You Heard?
by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist

HEARING AND ADVANCING AGE

It is estimated that 60 percent of those over the age of 65 and nearly 90 percent of individuals beyond the age of 80 experience hearing impairment to some extent. Most commonly, this type of age-related hearing loss is linked to a sensorineural disorder, know as presbycusis or nerve hearing loss. In such cases, the tiny hair cells that line the inner ear (cochlea) begin their nearly inevitable deterioration due to aging. As a result, those affected by this kind of hearing loss may be increasingly unable to decipher some specific details in the sounds they hear. For example, it may be difficult to distinguish between the high frequency sounds of such consonants as "S," "T," and "F." When this happens, it is an indication that age-related hearing impairment may be a problem.

As you get older, it is important to get your hearing checked regularly. If you do have a hearing problem, THE HEARING CENTER can help you. We have been in business since 1972, and dedicated to improving and restoring the quality of life for individuals with hearing impairments. Our number one priority is commitment to your needs. This is why we offer such services as: unlimited hearing aid adjustments, hearing adjustment/coping skills, hearing aid adapting techniques, and aural rehabilitation counseling. We are handicapped accessible, and are a healthcare provider for Pilgrim Health Care and Medicare. Medicaid and most major insurance plans are accepted, and we will help you process the forms. Please come visit us at 306 Washington St. (Rte 53), Norwell, or 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3-A), Quincy. Our phone number is 1-800-339-9316 Mastercard and Visa are accepted.

P.S. The hair cells of the inner ear may also be damaged by high fever, prolonged exposure to noise, or Ménière's disease.

Activist upset over no hearing decision on expansion

(Editor's note: a copy of the following letter to the assistant Secretary was provided to the Cohasset Mariner for publication).

Dear Mr. Reitsma:

I am writing to protest, in the strongest possible terms, your decision, as stated in your letter of Aug. 3 to Mr. Gregory Doyon, to not hold a public hearing during the public review period for the Supplemental Final Environmental Impact Report (SFEIR) for the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill project referenced above.

You are wrong when you say that "I do not believe that another informational hearing will generate any new information not already available to this office." CHL has filed a new EIR, which contains new information that can be commented on — information that was not available to your office at the Feb. 7 public hearing.

Besides, there have been a number of new developments since the February 7 hearing — such as ongoing enforcement action against CHL by the Conservation Commission and Board of Health, the new Solid Waste Master Plan, and the filing of the SFEIR.

If you really believe that there is no new information that can be brought out at another hearing, then are you also saying that there is no new information that could be brought out in written comments? After all, oral testimony at a public hearing is just another way, instead of sending a letter, of making a comment on the SFEIR. They are just different ways of sending a comment.

If you really believe that there is no new information affecting your decision on the SFEIR, then why are you bothering to accept written comments? Why should we send written comments, if you don't believe they will contain any new information? Is your mind already made up? Should we read this decision against the hearing as a signal that you intend, prior to receiving written comments, and despite the patent inadequacy of the SFEIR, to approve the report?

I remind you that the secretary does have the authority to find this SFEIR as "inadequate" and then to reject it. Citizens of Cohasset, through written and oral comments, can demonstrate the many inadequacies of the report. They can make these points in written comments, but should also have the opportunity to make these comments to you in person.

MEPA regulations, 301 CMR 11.9 (4) requires the Secretary to make a determination whether or not "...in the Secretary's judgment the Final EIR adequately and properly complies with the provisions of these regulations and with MEPA." 301 CMR 11.9(6) states that "If the Final EIR is found to be inadequate, the Secretary shall require that a Supplemental and Revised Final EIR be submitted..." Thus, it is clear that the Secretary has the discretion to use her judgment to find that this report is adequate, or inadequate.

My analysis of the SFEIR shows it is inadequate on a number of key issues — such as the failure yet again to show a need for the facility, the blatant disregard for the provisions of the town Water Resource District, the incorrect and surprising assertion that "0 percent" of CHL runoff goes towards Lily Pond. This EIR yet again fails to meet the requirements of the MEPA regulations that of "a process designed to lead to the full disclosure of environmental impact..." (301 CMR 11.01(3).

As you are aware, many citizens of Cohasset have serious and substantive concerns with the proposed CHL expansion. They deserve another forum to make their concerns, and their responses to the SFEIR, known to your office in the most effective way possible — at a public hearing. A hearing is just another way to make comments on the SFEIR and to clearly show not only the concerns of Cohasset residents, but also the many substantive issues that are still not properly addressed by CHL.

The hearing Feb. 7, I think you will agree, was an exceptionally useful and Angry assistant secretary responds

letters

Mr. McNabb:
Re: Cohasset Heights Landfill, McNabb Comment No. 4

I received your letter dated Aug. 8. It completely mis-characterizes my letter of Aug. 3 to the Board of Selectmen, in which I declined to schedule another public meeting as part of the MEPA review of this project.

My letter explicitly encouraged the board and interested citizens to submit comments on the latest report submitted by the project proponent which will help "this office and the secretary to fully understand the local concerns and to take these into consideration in preparing the decision" whether the report is adequate. You have no basis to suggest that the outcome of the review is a foregone conclusion and that the public review process is being rendered meaningless. In fact, you know from earlier rounds that the review by this office has been exhaustive and quite sensitive to local concerns. I assure you we will continue our review in that manner and I object to your suggesting otherwise.

I respectfully request that you not create unnecessary disputes or imaginary adversaries and, through your widely distributed statements, confusion about the MEPA review process. Nobody benefits. Stirring up emotions and political sentiment is not going to do anything to improve the review or to protect the environment.

I look forward to your substantive comments on the report.

Activist upset over no hearing decision...

informative meeting. While many people chose to make their comments in written form, others were glad to take the opportunity to make their comments in oral form and to learn from the testimony. Beyond being a forum for making comments on the SFEIR, the Feb. 7 hearing had value as an educational opportunity for the many people who attended. A hearing on the SFEIR can be expected to be yet another educational forum that will be of great benefit to the people of Cohasset.

The people of Cohasset are still very concerned about the potential expansion of CHL. We are very concerned that state officials, such as yourself, who have decision-making power over CHL, make their decisions based on the most complete information possible.

My request, and the request of the Board of Selectmen and Conservation Commission, for a public hearing is an entirely reasonable request that will not unduly burden your office and will be extremely valuable to the people of Cohasset by giving us a needed opportunity to comment on the problems the CHL expansion could create in Cohasset for many years to come.

It would be unfortunate if the Weld Administration would not show proper sensitivity for the people of Cohasset by giving them this chance to speak out in person on this new EIR, which after all is a different and newer document than the FEIR. It would be unfortunate if the Weld Administration, which has been attentive to the concerns of residents of other small towns on environmental issues, and which has a good environmental record, would fail to give the people of Cohasset every opportunity to speak out about this environmental threat.

I request that you reconsider your decision and that you come down to Cohasset again to hear from the people. We'd love to have you. Ultimately, it is the people of Cohasset that a hearing is for. Please provide us with that forum.

political notes

The committee to elect Robert Hedlund invites voters to a complimentary wine and cheese social to meet Bob Hedlund, candidate for state Senate in the Plymouth/Norfolk district.

The event begins at 5 p.m., August 30 at "My Place" — Billy Budd's, 117 Bridge St., North Weymouth.

Hedlund, who held the senate seat from 1991-92 is endorsed by Citizens for Limited Taxation, has pledged not to accept lobbyist or special interest PAC monies.

For more information, please call the Hedlund Campaign Headquarters at 740-4920.

William J. Forsyth, Independent candidate for Plymouth/Norfolk state Senator discussed the MWRA, Old Colony Railroad, economic revitalization and lower taxes on Dimension Cable in Weymouth recently.

Forsyth said campaign volunteers are needed. Call 834-1130 for information.

State Senator Brian McDonald's third annual Boston Harbor Boat Cruise drew more than 350 South Shore residents.

McDonald mentioned his efforts on behalf of MWRA taxpayer relief, increased local aid for towns, protecting communities attempting to defend themselves from being overrun by adult-oriented businesses, the tough new truth-in-sentencing law, tax incentives to spur economic growth, and improving transportation systems of the South Shore.

Tim Gage, Democratic candidate for state Senate in the Plymouth and Norfolk district, has filed a complaint with the state ethics commission charging that Senator Brian McDonald, who chairs the senate ethics committee, and his staff are violating senate ethics rules and state conflict of interest laws.

Gage said that Bill Ryan, a full-time paid state worker and senate staffer, has campaigned for McDonald on state time. He said that Ryan's campaign activities are in direct violation of senate rules and state law.

GOP to gather Sept. 18

South Shore Republicans and Independents will gather for the annual Cohasset GOP Cook-out at the oceanfront home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, Sunday, Sept. 18, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. Open to the public, all South Shore residents are invited to attend but reservations must be made in advance by calling Jean Muir, 383-1850 or Polly Logan, 383-0031.

Donation is $10 per person and limited tickets at the door will be $15. All state, congressional, county and General Court candidates will be invited to attend and to speak, Chairman Guild noted.

Cook-out Treasurer will be Douglas Peck, and reservations may be mailed to his attention at 63 Windy Hill Road, Cohasset 02025.

Candidates reception slated

The Hull Republican Town Committee will sponsor a Candidates Reception Tuesday, Aug. 23, from 7 to 9 p.m., at Donahue's Bayside Restaurant, 2 A St., Hull.

Republican statewide candidates who will appear include: John Lakian, U.S. Senate; Keith Hemeon, U.S. Congress: Janis Berry and Guy Carbone, Attorney General; Peter Forman, Secretary of State; and Forrester "Tim" Clark and Earle Stroll, Auditor. Local candidates include State Senate candidates: Robert Hedlund, Donald Hussey and Carolyn VanTine and State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray.

Jean Robinson will serve as chairman of the reception committee and other members are Joseph Chase, David Grossack, Catherine Mahoney, Clayton Robinson.

Republican candidates for Plymouth County offices will also be attending, including County Commissioner Robert Stone and candidate for Register of Deeds Jud Terzian. .

The Republican Town Committees of the surrounding towns, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Weymouth — have been invited to participate in this reception. The public is welcome to attend. For more information call 925-2826 or 925-3096.

National junior sailing championship is a (strong) breeze for Faye Menis

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

With her laid-back demeanor and tendency to avoid drawing attention to herself, one might expect 16-year-old Faye Menis to face the rough, open sea timidly and with great hesitation.

But that's hardly the case for the competitive sailor, though many of her fellow opponents who have followed her 14-foot, Laser Radial across the finish line probably wish it were.

Deceivingly strong for her size and weight, the 5-foot-6 Menis found the wind and choppy waters to her liking as she placed 11th overall in the 72-boat field at the 1994 U.S Sailing/Rolex Junior Women's Championship, held August 5-9 on Lake Ontario in Rochester, New York.

Menis' 11th-place finish proved to be a breakthrough of sorts in her fourth consecutive trip to the national championship.

As a 13-year-old in 1990, Menis, who began sailing as an 8-year-old, raced to 30th in her first national competition. She went on to steadily improve with each subsequent year, finishing 28th, 24th and 11th. With two years remaining in the 13-18 age group, Menis is looking to move up even higher.

"I've been getting better each year," she said. "I knew what was going to go on and knew more of the people who were going to be there. I expected to be in the top 10 so I almost made it. I think by next year I could be in the top 5."

The key to Menis' high finish were the five consistent finishes she pounded out. She garnered 66 points and wound up 25th, 10th, 13th, 12th and sixth in the individual races, held over the triangular-shaped course.

What makes her overall success in the championship all the more impressive is that there were just two girls her age that finished in front of Menis. Given her age and the indispensable experience she already has under her belt at such a young age, Menis should be considered a serious threat over the next two years — and even longer.

It's no surprise that her highest finish came under the windiest conditions. "I guess I had a good start," Menis said. "It was the windiest day and I sail best then."

And then her humbleness showed through.

"I don't know, I guess I just had good luck."

Luck is always part of any competition, but in the end it's not the deciding factor in victory. Menis' third consecutive Mass Bay Junior Singlehanded Trophy award and 17th-place finish in the open division of the Lipton Cup off Wollaston Beach are prime examples of

Hingham coach guides NHL stars

By Joe Reardon

It was workout time at Hanover Racquet and Fitness for the local crew of National Hockey League players and a standout female athlete who have turned to Hingham's Ed Connors to maintain their offseason fitness at the popular South Shore club.

But on this day there would be no curls, bench presses or squats for Hingham's Tony and Kelly Amonte, Andy Brickley or Hanover's Tim Sweeney.

At this early-morning hour few club members gave notice to the foursome in the midst of a one-hour training session in the club pool under the watchful eye of Connors. The players have been recognized on occasion, but Connors says they've been more than cooperative in dealing with fans.

"They're very accommodating," Connors said, "especially to the kids. They're good guys."

For the most part, however, their workouts go by uninterrupted by gawking fans. Connors laughed when he spoke of a "lighter moment" having to do with a woman who didn't realized the men going through their exercises in the pool were well-known, professional hockey players.

"One day a woman came in and asked, 'Can I join your exercise class,'" Connors said. "I told her it wasn't exactly an exercise class."

As for location, the club is an ideal place for Connors to conduct his workouts. "It's a great place to work out and we're very confident about training here," he said.

Connors scheduled an "easy" session in the pool to work the kinks out of the previous day's harder workout with the weights. But every workout Connors maps out for the young athletes is designed to help each of them reach their maximum potential on the ice, or in Kelly Amonte's case, on the soccer and lacrosse field, where at the University of Maryland she garnered All-American honors in both sports.

"All I want them to do when they get out of here is feel good and relaxed," said Connors. "In hockey you're not required to have great flexibility but you want to have full range of motion. You want the good leg strength and you don't want to be too strong up top."

Flexibility is important in certain areas of the body, however, particularly

Last Thursday Lt. Governor Paul Cellucci stopped by the Mariner office in Marshfield to talk re-election politics with some of our reporters and editors.

However, I couldn't resist asking the state's second banana about the most important issues confronting Massachusetts voters - the baseball strike and what to do with Butch Hobson.

Cellucci, who spoke about other political issues such as the Old Colony Rail and domestic violence for 30 minutes, brightened when I brought up sports.

"Hey, some sports questions. It's about time," he said. "Shoot."

First question: What's your opinion on the baseball strike?

Cellucci: "I think they should put both sides together in a room and have them stay there until it gets settled. It's a shame that fans are missing out on the game because of this."

Second question: Whose side are you on, the owners or the players?

Cellucci: "I'm not on either side. I haven't been paying attention to all the issues they've been talking about but I do know that the games should be played. It should have never reached this point. The fans are the ones being hurt the most."

Third and final question: Should the Red Sox fire Butch Hobson?

Cellucci: "I don't think so. I agree with what Roger Clemens said. They need some players. Butch is not the problem. The injuries have really hurt the team this year."

That ended our brief sports chat. The state's pinch-gov had places to go and people to see.

As for his opinions on the strike and Butch, Cellucci showed he was a baseball fan who has been in politics for a while. I think he probably agrees with one side, but knew there were more votes in siding with the fans.

Personally, I side with the players and think the owners should try to resolve any problems in the off-season.

I played baseball in high school and college and understand the sacrifices and talent it takes to reach the top. As it is, only 600 or so players make it to the big leagues every year. There are thousands of other players who play for peanuts in the minors and others who never even make it that far.

As for being an owner, the only thing I've ever owned is a truck. And as long as it performed well, I never tried to cut back its gas, oil or radiator fluid.

A touching moment occurred at the Silver Lake Summer Hoop camp last week.

Quincy's Jeff Timberlake, currently an assistant basketball coach at George Washington University, stopped his afternoon lecture on passing last Thursday and asked the 100 or so campers for a minute of their time.

"I'm kind of nervous and haven't done anything like this before, so be patient with me," he said.

Menis takes 11th at junior sailing championships...

the talent and potential, not luck, Menis possesses.

Menis is originally from the San Francisco Bay area of California and didn't move to Cohasset until she was a seventh-grader. Whereas year-round sailing on the west coast was an enjoyable experience for Menis, doing the same in the dead of winter in New England has been anything but for Menis when she heads out for a workout with fellow members of the Cohasset Yacht Club.

"We still sail year-round," Menis explained, "but it's not the same because it's real cold. Everyone's a little more cautious [because of the weather]."

The extreme weather conditions has been an advantage for Menis during the various regattas she competes in, whether it be the Scituate Frostbite series that begins in October and runs through April, or the Laser circuit that stretches from Newport on up the coast.

"I like the windy, choppy conditions," she said.

But most of all, Menis likes the competition. There's nothing she enjoys more than sizing up her opposition on the starting line of the race and trying to figure out where in the field she'll finish.

"I like looking at all the boats and figuring out who the favorites are and seeing in the end if they [her tactics] paid off," Menis said, her truly competitive nature showing for the first time.

While sailing is her first love, Menis is actually better known at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School for re-writing the middle school record books in track.

Just four months after moving to town, Menis started a string of two incredible track seasons that might not be seen in these parts for a long time to come.

By the time she was a freshman, Menis had already established junior high records in the long and triple jumps, 100 meters, 400 meters, 440 yards and low hurdles. Menis added her first high school record to the list last spring when she ran the 400-meter event in 62.3.

Don't be surprised if Menis turns in more of the same results next spring, on land and sea.

Hingham coach guides NHL stars during off season

the hips and legs.

"You look at the best players in the league and they're not huge people, but they have great leg strength. Speed and skill separates the top players."

Connors has the necessary background to know what types of workouts hockey players should be concentrating on during the offseason to improve their conditioning and help avoid injury throughout the course of a rigorous NHL season.

A former hockey player himself at Boston University, Connors went on to coach Hingham High School's squad before taking over the head position at Bridgewater State College in the days when the Bears had varsity hockey as part of their sports program.

Connors became interested in the training and conditioning area of the game and has been the athletes' summer strength and conditioning coach for the past four years.

"I played the game, coached the game and found my niche," said the personable Connors as he alternated talking training philosophy with giving encouragement and pointers to his athletes as they went through an array of exercises in the pool.

Many of the exercises Connors uses were developed by Igor Durenko, the Russian trainer who worked with figure skater Nancy Kerrigan in rehabilitating her knee after her infamous attack last December. Connors and Durenko are close friends who are in the process of co-writing a physical fitness and conditioning book.

The Amontes and Sweeney were the first to arrive at the pool. They looked like typical club members as they carried their gym bags, dressed casually in sweatpants and sneakers.

Brickley, who played for the Boston Bruins from '88-92, arrived 20 minutes later after dropping off his daughter.

Although they are are all friends and share the same sport, each has vastly different goals for the upcoming season.

A 13-year veteran, Brickley recently signed a contract with the New York Islanders after a knee injury in the playoffs cut short an impressive season in the Winnipeg Jets' minor league system. Connors's workouts are especially crucial to Brickley, who is working on rehabilitating his knee after undergoing reconstructive surgery on June 8.

So far he is happy with his progress and is confident the work he is doing this summer will put him back on the ice in top form. "I'm a quick healer," Brickley said with a smile.

Brickley was relieved he got the contract negotiation process behind him and signed with the Islanders prior to the start of the regular season.

New York had shown interest in his talents last year, but contract negotiations stalled and Brickley resigned with the Jets.

No stranger to injuries during his career, Brickley, more than anyone, learned the importance of not returning to the ice until 100-percent ready. If the knee surgery had to be done, the offseason was the best time for it, though Brickley does wish he could have played in his team's three final games.

"If I couldn't have not got hurt until Game 7 in the (minor league) finals it would have been better," Brickley said. "But I got hurt in Game 4.

Brickley's first goal in his comeback is to make the knee stronger than it has ever been and then get in the best shape of his career.

Brickley, however, has no intention of rushing the healing process. "If I reach those goals by October 1, that's fabulous," Brickley said as he dried off after getting out of the pool. "If it happens at Christmas, it happens at Christmas. My goals are very simple.

"I know what I have to do to get ready. That's why you see me here."

But probably the athlete who is getting the most out the workouts is Amonte's younger sister, Kelly. Like Tony, Kelly too graduated from Braintree's Thayer Academy where she starred in soccer and lacrosse.

Despite playing different sports at a vastly different level, Amonte has the unique opportunity of being able to train with bigger, stronger athletes. She says it is a definite advantage in getting herself in top form.

"It helps me keep in shape," said Amonte as she sat in a pool-side chair. "I don't realize how much I'm doing because I'm working out with these guys. It helps a lot.

"I seem to be in very good condition."

Amonte, a 30-goal scorer with the New York Rangers, wound up on the Chicago Blackhawks as the trade deadline approached.

The Rangers went on to win the Stanley Cup for the first time in 54 years, but Amonte was hardly disappointed he didn't get the opportunity to carry the Lord Stanley's cup over his head during the post-game celebration.

Amonte is happy playing on another perennial playoff team and sees the Blackhawks as a squad more than capable of making it to the finals.

"I was happy to see the guys win the cup," the muscular Amonte said. "I wasn't sad [not being a part of the celebration] by any means. Our chances of winning are as good as anybody's this year."

What Amonte was disappointed in was the Blackhawks' performance in the playoffs when they were eliminated uncharacteristically early. However, he likes the moves management has made to strengthen the team, particularly acquiring All-Star center Bernie Nicholls.

"We have two good scoring lines and two hard-checking lines. There's no reason why we shouldn't be at the top of the league and make a run for it in the playoffs."

And while whispers have circulated that it may be quite a while before Amonte's former team captures another championship, he dismisses the idea that the resignation of former head coach Mike Keenan and the ensuing fines handed down by the league, won't be a distraction to the players during the season.

"Knowing Mark Messier, Kevin Lowe and Adam Graves," Amonte explained, "they won't let it affect them [the team]. With a guy like Mark Messier as their leader, he won't allow it. He has been doing it for several years."

Weymouth native Sweeney has played for the Calgary Flames, Boston Bruins, was a member of the '92 Olympic team and is currently prepping for his second season on the Anaheim Mighty Ducks.

Sweeney expects the fans are looking for a successful season from the Ducks after the expansion team's promising start. "We had a pretty successful first year and hopefully we can build on last year's season," Sweeney said.

As for Sweeney's individual goal, he wants to further establish himself in the NHL.

"It's what I worked for my whole life," he said. "Right now I'm working towards being a regular year-in-year-out player."

With South Shore natives Amonte, Sweeney, the Penguins' Kevin Stevens and Amonte's teammate, Jeremy Roenick, all playing for NHL teams, the area is well represented at the professional level.

"Hopefully the trend continues," Sweeney said. "There has always been good players in college and a few in the NHL. It's a good hockey area."

When asked why he thought the number of players from the South Shore making it to the pro level was on the increase, Connors didn't have an answer.

But the comment was there, loud and clear.

"It's incredible," he said.

Chicago Blackhawk Tony Amonte takes a break from his offseason training to sign autographs at Pastimes sports cards shop in Cohasset. The Hingham native believes Ed Connors's workouts get him in that much better shape when preseason camp opens.

Oceanside Bike Fest '94 for MS registration ongoing

Join the National Multiple Sclerosis Society for one of the most beautiful bike tours in Massachusetts Sunday, Sept. 18. Plymouth Savings Bank will sponsor "Oceanside Bike Fest '94", an exciting bike tour which takes cyclists through the scenic coastal communities of Massachusetts' South Shore. The tour winds through the rocky shores of Scituate and Cohasset and allows cyclists to take full advantage of the area's forests and parks. What better way to spend an autumn day!

"Oceanside Bike Fest '94" promises to be a fun tour, and there are many prizes for the participants. This year they hope the top fundraiser will win an all-expense paid trip for two to Orlando, FL., for five days and four nights. Additional sponsors of the tour include: Kiss 108 FM, MPG Newspapers, WHDH-TV, Volvo, Bicycling Magazine, Budget, Performance Bicycle Shop, The DJ Connection, Turbana, Creamette, Carrabassett Spring Water, and Jack in the Beanstalk.

Multiple Sclerosis is a chronic progressive disease of the central nervous system affecting over 6,000 people in the Massachusetts area alone. This mysterious disease usually hits people between the ages of 20 and 40, when they are just beginning their careers and families. Each mile of "Oceanside Bike Fest" that is ridden will raise funds for national research, and will provide support services to local people affected by MS. If you would like to help these people but do not want to ride a bicycle, there are many volunteer opportunities available to you for the day. Over 100 volunteers are needed, so please call the MS Society for more details on how to donate just a few hours of your time.

For more information on "Oceanside Bike Fest '94", call Jennifer or Liz at (508) 291-2169. Please help us find a cure for Multiple Sclerosis!

Coast Guard sponsors lessons

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary Unit 1202 is sponsoring a 12-lesson Boating Skills & Seamanship Course beginning Sept. 7, at the Town River Yacht Club in Quincy. Registration is at 6:30 p.m. The cost is $22 for text book material. For further information, call Mrs. Veva Johnson, (617) 471-4130.

extra points

by Joe & Dave

He then walked to his gym bag at half-court and pulled out a jewelry box.

He walked over to his girlfriend, Gina, who was helping him at the lecture, and got down on one knee.

"Will you marry me?" he asked.

The young basketball players watching the lecture began chanting, "Yes. Yes. Yes."

After a few seconds of chants, Gina said yes to Timberlake and the place went bonkers.

"It was the most incredible thing I've seen," said Silver Lake coach Dick Steele. "People got really caught up in this. Some of the girls at the camp even started crying because they were so moved. I still can't believe what happened."

A crowd of more than 350 showed up for a special autograph signing by Chicago Blackhawks star Tony Amonte at Pastimes sports cards shop last Friday evening in Cohasset.

The Hingham resident signed glossy photos, hockey cards, pucks and miniature sticks for fans of all ages. Amonte also took the time to chat with each fan as he put his signature on the items placed in front of him.

Amonte is the second NHL player to appear at Elliot Goldberg's new shop. Steve Heinze of the Boston Bruins was at the shop last month and there was a large turnout for that signing as well.

At the rate he is going at now, Goldberg isn't far from becoming the sports cards celebrities mogul of the South Shore. Just don't hold your breath waiting for an O.J. appearance.

With no resolution to the baseball strike foreseeable anywhere in the near future, fans have to find other ways to keep themselves occupied in the dog days of summer. I compiled a top-10 list to help you along:

10) To get an idea how strong your respective high school's top lineman is, and if you have the nerve, go up to him and say, "What was more of a challenge, playing Roseanne's husband or Fred Flintstone?"

9) Play a female high-school basketball star in HORSE when you're stuck for a topic for your upcoming "Extra Points" column.

8) Try to catch a glimpse of Barbara Eden's navel on "I Dream of Jeannie."

7) Watch late-night talk shows on CBS to pick-up offbeat ways to convey to your readers what to do during a baseball strike.

6) Tell people you don't like that the motion picture "The Piano" is a riveting, must-see movie.

5) Tell the same thing to people you do like, just as a practical joke.

4) Head down to Martha's Vineyard and try to find Lady Di, Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell and Socks.

3) Try to come up with sayings Forrest Gump might have used had the movie gone an hour longer.

2) Sprint through the South Shore Plaza and see how many security guards will chase you.

1) Memorize the theme song of "The Patty Duke Show" on Nickelodeon.

Adam's Cup sails into town

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The waters off Cohasset Harbor will be dotted with sailboats guided by some of the best female racers in the country from August 26-31 as the 1994 Adams Cup U.S. Women's National Sailing Championship is hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club.

Racing in International 210's, 30-foot keelboats, 10 four-women crews will be competing in a round-robin series of 10 races over a five-day span in their quest for the Adams Cup title. The crews switch boats after every race, making sailing skill more important than the individual's boat.

Wakeman said he had no way of telling how big a crowd the national championship would draw, but did say there seems to be a lot of talk surrounding the upcoming races and the competition they will draw.

"People seem to be very excited," said Sam Wakeman, the event's chairman.

Abutters give Shaw's food for thought

By Andrew MacLellan
Mariner staff

Plans by Shaw's Supermakets to build a new store in Cushing Plaza may have inched closer to fruition last Saturday, when the food giant played host to a dozen abutters who worry their endorsement of the project might welcome in a bad neighbor.

With a wall full of schematic drawings and a tour bus that idled unused, a contingent of Shaw's representatives fielded questions over screening, truck noise and light infiltration during the two hour discussion held in the former Johnny Appleseed's building in the plaza.

But as Shaw's spokesmen peeled the onion of dissent, they discovered new

Harbor Islands get by with help from friends

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

Everybody loves to take a trip to the islands in the summer. Nantucket with its rugged shore line, raging surf, and cobbled streets filled with quaint colonial charm is definitely a summer hot-spot. And Martha's Vineyard is a larger than life island, large enough for the likes of Jackie O and family, Lady Di and even the Clintons.

But there are many other islands to visit right here in your own backyard. The Friends of the Boston Harbor Islands have be sponsoring informational, educational tours and encouraging use of the these islands since 1979.

Suzanne Gall Marsh founded the group after visiting the islands, which provided a great place to get away from it all. As a visitor, Gall Marsh said it became apparent that there were far more visitors than staff on the islands and could see there was a need for more caretakers.

Gall Marsh's group started out as the Boston Harbor Island Volunteer Corps, and as a pilot program worked closely with such established groups as the Sierra Club and the Appalachian Mountain Club.

In 1982, the corps incorporated and changed its name to the Volunteers and Friends of the Boston Harbor Islands Inc., including both volunteers and members who support the group.

Gall Marsh said the group started out

Water bills due Sept. 15

Water/Sewer bills were mailed Aug. 15. Payments are due in the office of the Collector of Taxes by 7 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 15. Checks should be payable to the Town of Cohasset and mailed to P.O. Box 296, Cohasset 02025-0296.

The bill reflects usage from May 1 to Aug. 1. May and June consumption was calculated at the Fiscal 1994 rates while July was calculated at the new rates voted at town meeting in March.

The unpaid Fiscal 1994 charges are being handled separately and will not show on your new 1995 bill.

Warrants will be served in August on unpaid Fiscal 1994 water/sewer charges. When a warrant is served in person, collector's and deputy collector fees in the amount of $28 are added to the unpaid balance. Any 1994 bills that remain unpaid on Nov. 15 will be subject to a lien on the 1995 real estate bill and a $50 lien penalty will be added to the total amount due.

Warrants will also be served in August on 1994 Real, Personal Property and Boat Excise.

Absentee ballots available

Absentee ballots are available at the town clerk's office for the primary Tuesday Sept. 20. Anyone may apply for an absentee ballot if they will be out of town, have a physical disability or because of religious beliefs.

Absentee voting may be done in the office of the town clerk during regular business hours until noon Monday Sept. 19. Those voters who cannot get to the clerk's office should mail a written request for a ballot to the town clerk. Included in the application letter should be the voters name as registered, party designation,m registration address, precinct, address where the ballot should be sent and the voter's signature. Applications may also be picked up at the office.

The clerk's office will be closed at noon Monday Sept. 19 to prepare for the election.

For more information call the clerk's office at 383-9900, ext. 105, 106 or 107.,

Citizen of the year named

Lesley Grilli of Cohasset was named 1994 Volunteer of the Year at the South Shore Art Center for her many hours of dedication and expertise in coordinating the exhibitions. Not only does she often help install art, she administers the extensive paper work involved and keeps information flowing smoothly. Grilli studies painting with Pat McCarthy and is a member of the board of directors.

Recognized for continued outstanding service to the Art Center were Mary Alice Flynn and Susan Nalband of Scituate who coordinate the entire gift gallery and install all the exhibitions. Mary Alice Flynn contributes many hours weekly in recruiting artists, maintaining accurate records, maintaining a unique and creative stock of hand-crafted gifts and welcoming visitors with a cheerful smile and enthusiastic knowledge about the artists. Susan Nalband, working with Mariya Walsh of Hull and Joy Osborn of Scituate makes the critical decisions to install the art creatively and enhance each artist's work to its best advantage. She has become renowned for her discerning eye and elegant placement. Mary Alice and Susan are both past volunteers of the year.

Also singled out for recognition were the Cohasset Mini School, headed by Jan Martin for their continued help with mailing; Meg Robbins of Hingham and Suzan Killilea of Cohasset for their dedicated efforts in promoting the services of the Art Center; Helen Gallop for her dedicated office assistance; Jean Higgins of Scituate for ably coordinating all the exhibition receptions for the past few years.

The South Art Center always has opportunities for volunteer assistance. For information call 383-ARTS.

GOP cookout planned

The South Shore Republicans and Independents will share the annual Cohasset GOP Cookout from 4:30 to 7 p.m. Sunday Sept. 18 at the home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Rd. The cookout is open to the public. All South Shore residents are welcome but reservations must be made in advance by calling Jean Muir at 383-1850 or Polly Logan at 383-0031.

A donation of $10 per person in advance and $15 at the door will be accepted. All state, congressional, county and general court candidates will be invited to attend and speak.

Reservations may be mailed to Douglas Peck, 63 Windy Hill Rd., Cohasset 02025.

Art center offering new classes for fall

Currently on display at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Rd., Cohasset is "Unexpected Discoveries," an exhibition featuring photography by Jeremy Barnard of Georgetown, acrylics by Janet Blagdon of Needham and sculpture by Walter Chaney of Rhode Island. It is complemented by a gallery artists exhibition featuring Kimberlee Alemian, Richard Alemian, Susan DeMichele and Claffy Williams, all of Cohasset; Barrie Andrews of Arlington, Berj Kailian of Weymouth, Gail Marie Nauen of Carver and Marie Peters of Bryantville. Rita Kirk of Cohasset is the faculty feature through August with Mary Wilkas of Boston spotlighted in September and October. A reception with the artists is scheduled from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday Sept. 9.

The Art Center will be open Sundays from noon to 4 p.m. beginning September 11. Artists will offer demonstrations during the Sunday hours. Gail Nauen will demonstrate printmaking September 11; Kimberlee Alemian, painting September 18; Claffy Williams, painting September 25.

Sculptor Walter Chaney will speak on "Wood in Process" at 7:30 p.m. Thursday Sept. 22.

The exhibition, reception, demonstrations and lecture are free and open to the public. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and Sunday noon to 4 p.m. beginning September 11.

Registration is open for fall courses and workshops which begin September 26.

Workshops offered this fall include an Art Safari for adults led by Ros Farbush. Beginners to advanced artists in all media will draw and paint the scenic South Shore. Several Saturday workshops are available for adults, including "Introduction to Japanese Brush Painting," "Self Promotion for Artists," "Garden Sculpture," and "Art Forum."

"Pumpkin Animals and People" for pre-kindergarten will run from 10 to 11:30 a.m. Saturday Oct. 29 and "Witches' Den with Spiders" for grades 1 through 3 is offered from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday Oct. 29.

The annual Blue Ribbon Members Show, featuring work in all media by Art Center members will be on display October 6 through November 13. A reception with the artists is planned from 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday Oct. 20.

A trip to New York to visit the Metropolitan Museum of Art and nearby galleries is planned for Wednesday Nov. 9.

Arts Society seeks singers

The Harbour Choral Arts Society is having open rehearsals for prospective members from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. September 12, 19 and 26 at the Lutheran Church of the Cross in Hanover. Formal auditions are not required but a commitment to weekly rehearsals and musical excellence is expected.

The 55 member group with members from all over the South Shore, including Cohasset and Hingham, is beginning its seventh year and has performed a variety of music from Schuman to Broadway.

Director John Weiss is a semi-professional opera singer as well as an experienced choral conductor.

For information call Iris Stone at 826-8748.

Rec department hours

From Aug. 22 through Labor Day, Sept. 5, the recreation department office will be open on an intermittent basis, due to vacation schedules.

Beach stickers will continue to be on sale Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from 10 a.m to noon, through Wednesday, Aug. 31, at the recreation office, first floor, town hall.

Information regarding fall recreation soccer and the other fall programs will be available during September.

September clambake set

September clambake is slated. It's sponsored by the Harbor Island League, Inc., a non-profit organization devoted to the preservation and maintenance of the historical and physical features of the Boston Harbor Islands.

Plan now to bring your friends and family and enjoy beautiful Nantasket beach. The ocean views are spectacular and our old-fashioned clambake will bring back unforgettable memories of years past, Sunday, Sept. 21, 1 to 4 p.m., at Nantasket/Hull Shore Drive extension HRA property.

Harbor Islands get by with help from friends...

with about 13 volunteers and through open houses, media campaigns and a recruiting program their numbers have grown to more than 120.

Volunteers go through a training program and donate two weekends or five or more days each year giving tours and information on the islands, working on island cruises by narrating, selling tickets and Friends merchandise and helping to maintain and keep the islands clean.

Gall Marsh said the Friends have a three-fold mission: direct service,; advocacy and public education which involves boat trips,; exhibits and public forums.

Currently, Gall Marsh said the National Park Service is winding up a "Special Resource Study" of the Boston Harbor Islands and will be making a report to Congress by October with recommendations for the future management for the islands.

"This could mean a lot for the islands, especially in improvements for public access," Gall Marsh said.

There are 30 islands in all, and seven in the harbor park are open for public access. The Metropolitan District Commission and the Department of Environmental Management own and operate the park with a good deal of help from the Friends.

And the Friends don't just offer tours. Gall Marsh spoke of the "Treasured Islands" program done in conjunction with the Department of Social Services, which takes about 100 kids out each Monday in the summer to visit, go on an incredible treasure hunt, and learn about the islands. Hingham resident and Friends volunteer Eleanor O'Sullivan and former director James Bennett started this island day-camp three years ago, and O'Sullivan says the response from the kids has been tremendous. Along with donations from several corporate sponsors, O'Sullivan and Bennett finance the entire project.

Another very worthwhile program is the Boston Harbor Re-vegetation Project, which reintroduces native species, especially trees to the islands, as many species have fallen prey to Sumac, Gall Marsh said.

Friends volunteers can't seem to say enough good things about the group and its work.

One young Hingham volunteer, who did not want to be identified, joined the group three years ago after taking a winter wildlife cruise to Georges Island and with his knowledge, enthusiasm and dedication, has been given the honorary title Mayor of Lovells island.

"The islands are a valuable resource," he said, adding, "it's a great way to get away from the city. It's like a vacation to Nantucket or the Vineyard - only closer and cheaper."

Cohasset resident Bill Caldwell who takes the commuter boat out of Hingham found out about the Friends two years ago and quickly signed the whole family up. Caldwell said he enjoys camping, and by volunteering gets to help out, do something useful and camp. The Caldwells volunteer by cleaning up camping and picnic sites, clearing hiking trails and the beaches and helping out on dock duty - meeting visitors and apprising them of the rules. Caldwell, who said he loved working with the friends noticed that use and enjoyment of the islands is on the rise and is glad to see it.

"The harbor islands are great," he said.

Visitors can navigate their own boats or take a Friends 'cruise from Rowes Wharf in Boston or catch the water taxi at Hingham Harbor and visit Georges, Lovells, Thompson, Gallops, Bumpkin, and Grape islands. All of these islands have their own special beauty and many have an interesting military history as well, making them a terrific spot for both nature lovers and historians.

A real naturalist's island, Grape Island is also the closest to the mainland and was at one time connected. Unlike some of the other islands, Grape has no military structures to tour. But birds, rabbits and a whole host of other wildlife enjoy the island's 50 beautiful acres.

Also located in Hingham Bay is Bumpkin Island, where visitors will discover a former children's hospital started by Clarence Burrage in 1901. The hospital which operated until 1945, specialized in care for handicapped children. Handicapped accessible and ahead of its time, Burgess' hospital was fully ramped and had no stairs.

Gallops Island hosts a seagull colony and was the former site of a quarantine hospital in the late 19th century. During the first and second World Wars the island served as radio training school for The Merchant Marine.

With a variety of eco-systems, you'll find woodlands, sand dunes and marshlands on Lovells Island as well as the remains of Fort Standish. Standish defended the outer harbor area from enemy invasions from 1900-1946. The MDC owns Lovells, and with a permit you can bring your sleeping bag and tent and camp for the night or the weekend. Lovells is also the only island with supervised swimming and a life guard and the adjacent waters are considered some of the cleanest in the harbor.

Thompson is the only privately owned island and is the home to the Thompson Island Outward Bound Education Center. With 157 acres, this education based island is the largest "classroom" in the Boston area.

The most popular and most frequently visited harbor island is George's Island where visitors tour Fort Warren. Built in 1850, Fort Warren served as a prison to confederate soldiers during the Civil War. But George's Island is more than just a fort. Friends volunteer and naturalist John Nove gives weekend tours of the backside of George's island during July and August.

Peddocks Island, which is also in Hingham Bay, is like four islands in one, said Gall Marsh, adding a damaged pier makes visiting this island by water taxi impossible. Still private boat owners can make the trip to visit the island with the largest shore line of all, the remains of Fort Andrews, a former Portuguese fishing village and a seasonal community.

Little Brewster is of big interest as the oldest light house site in the country. Visitors can tour Boston Light, the only manned lighthouse in the country and Gall Marsh said she is hoping to have some fall trips to the Little Brewster.

Public access to most of the islands is available from Memorial Day through Labor Day. Access from Hingham is available from July through Labor Day and the Friends offer their "Sunset Cruises" into September as well as an annual New Years Day trip to Thompson Island. For more information on volunteering and membership in the Friends of Boston Harbor Islands call (617)740-4290.

'Little Mermaid' makes waves in Cohasset

By Kathleen Delaney
Mariner correspondent

Something fishy swam through Cohasset's Town Hall Aug. 16 and 17.

Eager audience members entering through the doors into the stage area were delighted to be submerged under the sea for the Children's Drama Workshop summer performance of "The Little Mermaid."

Fluorescent multi-colored fish, donated by Dependable Cleaners in Cohasset, hung from criss-crossed strings, bouncing occasionally for the effect of flotation. Silver streamers also swayed from the strings and shimmered in the light, drawing the audience into Ariel's sea world.

How did 18-year-old Liz Deveney gain the responsibility for such an incredible undertaking? She and her sisters, Grace and Sara, organized neighborhood backyard plays when they were younger, and Liz's passion for acting caused her to bring the plays to Cohasset's Recreation Department. She kicked off the first summer with "The Wizard of Oz" and "Cinderella," followed by "Alice in Wonderland" in 1992, and "Peter Pan" last summer. "The Little Mermaid," being the first musical production, sparked added energy and interest among those involved. The sailors and the mermaids agreed that a musical was "better than putting on a regular play, 'cause there's music and everything."

No fairytale world can be created at the drop of a hat. Liz's acting experience helped her recognize what she needed to accomplish to run a program like this. She handled the pressure in stride, assigning specific tasks to certain days, such as having the kids read scripts to fit them into their proper roles, typing the script and program with the help of Grace, and collecting registration forms and fees.

Caroline Carr transforms from a mermaid into a human during last week's production of "The Little Mermaid," showing just how much effort went into the costumes, scenery and sepcial effects. (Staff photo by Alan Chapman)

Liz, her helpers, and the children have spent countless hours in preparation for the production since their first practice date, July 5. Sara drew three main sets so the children could paint them. Tom Finnegan from the Dramatic Club spent 16-hour days working on the lighting for the show, while Mrs. Kondrat spent unlimited time playing the songs on the piano and contributing to making the sets.

Parent involvement ranged from donating props and providing their children with costumes to helping them learn their lines. Costumes varied from Sebastian's elaborate crimson crab suit to the mermaids' coral and aqua floral bathing suits and leotards.

Fifty boys and girls ranging in age from five to 12 participated in this summer youth program. Nine-year-old Caroline Carr, who gave a brilliant performance as Ariel, said she joined the production because acting and singing are two of her favorite things. The audience could feel the emotion Caroline exerted during her solo, "Part of Your World," which happened to be her favorite song in the musical. Although Caroline has never taken singing lessons, Liz describes her phenomenal voice as "extremely talented."

Elizabeth Ingber, 11, was radiant as Sebastian, and is thankful to Liz, her mom, and her brother for helping her learn her lines and the songs. Indulging herself in the entire production is proof of how much she enjoys acting. Elizabeth had prior experience working with Liz in Norwell's Company Theatre production of "The Wizard of Oz." Knowing Liz would be in charge of "The Little Mermaid," she readily joined the drama workshop.

The involvement of young children in a stage production is beneficial to them for various reasons. Aside from the fact that it provides a social routine, it teaches them dedication to show up every day, learn their parts, and develop their attention span. It also allows them to get over stage fright early in life and prepares them for speeches and oral reports that lie ahead in their careers as students. Liz makes the work for the production fun for the children, realizing that for many of them, it is the highlight of their summer. Liz reacted at the end of the fishy tale, "The kids are great! Sometimes I'm so surprised they know where they're supposed to go. It's exciting!"

Supervisors sought

The Norfolk County Conservation District, a non-profit volunteer board, is seeking candidates for the position of district supervisor. The board consists of seven members and meets in Walpole the third Thursday of each month at 8 p.m.

Supervisors work on fund-raising, delegate technical assistance provided by the USDA Soil Conservation Service staff, direct and plan the district's programs and assign priorities to resource development tasks.

Anyone interested should submit a brief statement of interest to NCCD, 400 Main St., Walpole 02081 to the attention of Gayl Sanzi or call 508-668-0995.

"Bike and Hike" for charity

"Bike and Hike '94," to benefit Retinitis Pigmentosa, will take place Saturday Sept. 17 at Wompatuck State Park, Hingham.

Live music by "Class Reunion," prizes and a complimentary lunch will be provided.

For information call 843-4205.

Spofford named to campaign

Carolyn Van Tine, candidate for state Senate in the Plymouth-Norfolk District, has announced that Rob Spofford will serve as her campaign coordinator in Cohasset.

"Rob is a hard worker and any campaign would be thrilled to have him on their team," said Van Tine. "I am very glad that he has decided to support my candidacy, and I know my candidacy will do well with his help."

Spofford, who is a member of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee, said, "Carolyn Van Tine is working hard to represent the republican party this election. I am willing to help in any way I can. I hope the Cohasset voters will work for her in the weeks and months ahead and vote for her September 20."

Voters may call Spofford at 383-1680.

Theater classes to open

Registration is now in progress for the fall theatre classes offered by RMW Productions at the Company Theater Center for the Arts in Norwell.

A new addition to these courses this fall will be an acting class for adults which will meet every Saturday for eight weeks, beginning Sept. 17, from 3:45 to 5 p.m.

This class will focus on basic acting technique, stage movement, improvisation and sense memory work. Work on scene study and monologue development will also be available to those adults who want and are ready for this work.

For further information on this exciting new acting class for adults, call RMW Productions at 508-224-4548.

Show postponed

Due to severe weather the August 18, 10:30 a.m. performance of "Beauty and the Beast" was postponed and re-scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Tuesday Aug. 30. Anyone holding tickets for the August 18 show may use them for the August 30. show.

Anyone who cannot use their tickets on August 30 may return them at the point of purchase or through the mail for a full refund by August 26. Phone sales may be returned by mail.

around town

by Sallyann Chatterton

It has been called to my attention that in articles submitted about the death in California of one-time Cohasset resident Frank Knoy, the name of his daughter, Mrs. Norma Mucia of Santa Ana Heights, CA, was inadvertently omitted. Other surviving family members include wife, Edna, sons Albert, Homer and Thomas, five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Frank, who was prominent in town affairs in the 1950s as water commissioner, president of Rotary and active in Boy Scouts, died Aug. 3 at age 96. A memorial service is planned for Sunday, Aug. 28, at Norma's home.

Forty is a magic number for Judy Cellucci! That is the birthday that she celebrated recently, and wait until you read how her husband Dan arranged her party for her. Aug. 7 he hired a bus and Judy and 40 women all headed to Newport where they were treated to a High Tea at Belcourt Castle! Doesn't that sound wonderful? Surely a birthday that Judy will remember forever, as well as all of her friends.

Speaking of birthdays, it is time to wish Norman Swain a happy day, and many more of course. His day will happen next week, hope it is super!

Maryanne and Sean Grady are proud new parents. Give a rousing cheer to Thomas Joseph Grady, who was born Aug. 5 at 5:59 a.m. at South Shore Hospital and weighed 8 lbs. 8 ozs. Thomas joins his brother, Timothy Patrick Grady. His grandparents are Rose and Joe Dooley and Betty and Tom Grady. Congratulations to all of you.

South Shore Republicans and Independents will gather for the annual Cohasset GOP cookout at the ocean-front home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset, Sunday, Sept. 18, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. Open to the public, all South Shore residents are invited to attend but reservations must be made in advance by calling Jean Muir (383-1850) or Polly Logan (383-0031). Donation is $10 per person and limited tickets at the door will be $15. All state, congressional, county and general court candidates will be invited to attend and to speak, Chairman Guild noted. Cookout treasurer is Douglas Peck and reservations may be mailed to his attention at 63 Windy Hill Rd., Cohasset 02025.

Speaking of prominent Republicans, did you know that Polly Logan broke her arm while she was walking at Cabot Beach? Polly said it would have been more exciting if she had been roller blading! Her son, Malcolm, was here at the time. He was at Cohasset Jewelers (with his antique jewelry from around the world). Polly claims that Malcolm was some comfort. He told her she was lucky it wasn't her leg; they "might have considered shooting her like they do a horse". Hope your arm mends quickly, Polly.

While we were having lunch at the Cape last week, guess who we ran into? Dick and Hope Seeley! At the beach of course (everyone knows what a "beach bum" Hope is)! They love life on Cape Cod and have a charming home there, complete with tons of visitors of course. They are missed "around town."

Mary Jeanette Murray certainly had reason to be pleased and proud a few weeks ago when her Dad, Nate Hurwitz, and late husband, Phil, were honored with the dedications of the Hingham Rotary and 3A bridge. Certainly a fitting tribute to a grand family.

We were all sorry to learn of the passing of Fred Wood, he was a wonderful man. Fred, as most will remember, was the owner of Peterson Realtors and Peterson Insurance Agency before he retired to Florida. A distinguished man with a real presence, he will be missed!

Of course we cannot fail to mention Vito Conte, who also passed away in Florida recently. Vito was such a nice man, loved by all who knew him for his humor and friendly manner. His smile will long be remembered!

Mom needed a helping hand... not a nursing home.

We all knew Mom was slowing down and could use some help, but even her doctor said she didn't need a nursing home. While she knew she could rely on us, Mom insisted she didn't want to be a burden to her children.

That's why we're all so glad she found a beautiful new home at Allerton House. Assisted living is a wonderful alternative: Mom gets the help she needs to stay as independent as possible, and she's already made a number of new friends.

In El Salvador, your first drunk driving offense is your last

Check out the police blotter. As July drew to a close only four arrests were made in town for drunk and underage drinking and driving.

This is a good sign.

It could be the new state crackdown on Massachusetts motorists launched in late June is hitting home.

Under the new law motorists lose their licenses on the spot if stopped for drunken driving. It's called the automatic license suspension law.

Teens must be especially careful. "You drink, you drive, you walk," a statewide ad campaign tells teenagers because of the new law's special zero tolerance .02 blood alcohol concentration for drivers aged 16 to 21.

Widespread knowledge about this new law will save lives and prevent injuries by stopping drunken driving crashes before they happen.

There has been a 30 percent decline in drunk driving deaths over the last decade, from 25,165 in 1982 to 15,659 in 1993. But alcohol-related deaths are particularly tragic because every one is preventable.

"Studies show that the sure and swift loss of a driver's license, even more than jail time or a stiff fine, is the strongest deterrent to prevent most people from driving after they've had too much to drink," said John Gavin, chairman of the Century Council, a non profit organization dedicated to reducing alcohol abuse.

There has been a six to nine percent drop in alcohol-related fatalities when states enact automatic license suspension laws.

The automatic suspension is even more powerful when it comes to young drivers. Alcohol-related crash deaths declined 34 percent overall in the first four states that adopted the .02-alcohol tolerance law targeted to teens.

Just in case you think that Massachusetts is coming down hard on drunk drivers here's how they are treated in other countries.

Australia: The names of the drivers are sent to the local newspapers and are printed under the heading, "He's Drunk and in Jail."

Malaya: The driver is jailed, and if he's married, his wife is jailed, too.

South Africa: A 10-year prison sentence and the equivalent of a $10,000 fine, or both.

Turkey: Drunk drivers are taken 20 miles from town by the police and forced to walk back, under escort.

Norway: Three weeks in jail at hard labor, one year loss of license. Second offense within five years — license revoked for life.

Finland and Sweden: Automatic jail for one year at hard labor.

Costa Rica: Police remove plates from car.

Russia: Revoked for life.

England: One year suspension and $250 fine and jail for one year.

France: Three year loss of license, one year in jail and $1,000 fine.

Poland: Jail and fine and forced to attend political lectures.

Bulgaria: A second conviction results in execution.

El Salvador: Your first offense is your last. Execution by firing squad.

"Big Dig": The Origins of a Boondoggle

This unmagic moment was predictable 11 years ago when Frederick Salvucci — Mike Dukakis' Transportation Secretary for all 12 of his gubernatorial years — first put a $2 billion price tag on the cost of depressing Boston's Central Artery for its one-mile run between North and South Stations: the real cost of the project would double, triple, then quadruple long before the first car touched rubber to macadam.

Why? Two reasons, in essence. First, it's fun to spend other people's money, it doesn't hurt a bit. When the state spends taxpayers' money, the spenders don't feel the anxiety you and I do when we write a fifty dollar check knowing that if all our checks come clear in a swoop, one of them is going to bounce.

Because it doesn't hurt anyone in state government to overspend, these projects always come deluxe, always have prizes for the powerful, noisy, litigious and ever-proliferating special interests; and they always have cost over-runs. The bigger the project, the bigger the over-run. We learned this with the Boston Common Garage scandal in the 1960's and again with the state buildings scandal in the 1970's. Now, since the "Big Dig" is the biggest earth-moving scheme since the Cape Cod Canal, we shouldn't be surprised if Mr. Salvucci's early dollar projections, as well as his opening day projection, bear no relation to anything that has happened since.

The second reason the cost of the Big Dig has to date nearly quadrupled to $7.7 billion is that from its inception it has been more of a pipe dream than a transportation project. When the present Central Artery was built in the early 1950's, the primo-proto-yuppie thinking of the day was that old harbors made good sewers and old waterfronts were best paved over in the name of progress.

Young Fred Salvucci, who grew up in Brighton, watched as this thinking divided Boston from the sea that made it a city, and he saw that it was wrong. As he rose from Little City Hall Manager in East Boston to Mayor Kevin White's transportation advisor to Mike Dukakis' Transportation Secretary, it evolved into his life's work to remove the Central Artery and reattach Boston to the sea. A noble goal. But it corrupted his considerable intellect in the sense that Salvucci, who lives simply and sought no personal riches from the offices he held, was willing to sacrifice most other public purposes to keep the prize of demolishing the elevated Central Artery alive. Thus, no cost was too high nor no scheme too convoluted to get it done.

Accordingly, Salvucci accepted a third harbor tunnel to Logan Airport, one he and Dukakis had for many years opposed. He threw out a North Station-South Station rail link, which in the 1970's he had used as a justification for removing the Artery, when that link turned unpopular with the pro-Big Dig coalition he was building. He accepted commuter rail restoration on the South Shore, which had always bored him, in return for the Big Dig votes of South Shore legislators.

In business it is said that in order to make a deal you have to be willing to walk away from a deal because if you aren't your opposite party will take you to the cleaners before agreeing to terms. Because of his passion on the matter, Salvucci wasn't willing to give up the Artery project, and the result is a $7.7 billion one-mile pipe dream, not a sensible transportation project.

We will get the Central Artery torn down, all right, but in doing so we have agreed to a third harbor tunnel to Logan, agreed to building the Artery's ugly equivalent ("Scheme Z") on the Cambridge side of the Charles River, agreed to the biggest earth-moving scheme since the Cape Cod Canal. The third harbor tunnel connecting Logan Airport to the southern and western suburbs is important; the rest of the $7.7 billion will go to improve and beautify one mile of highway.

How would the project have looked if instead of starting as a noble pipe dream it had started as a transportation improvement? Could it have been done for less? I think so. First, real transportation planners would have said, it's a mistake to run an interstate through any city's downtown. Therefore, re-route Maine/New Hampshire traffic to New York and Florida (Routes 93 and 95) wide of Boston along Route 495 to 290 and 395 in Worcester County, with necessary improvements to those roads. Easy!

Then, for remaining north-south traffic through Boston, build a Golden Gate-type bridge from the end of the Mass Pike at Route 3 to Logan Airport and thence across the Saugus marshes and on to Route 95 north, with a connection to Route 93 north via an improved Route 16 in Chelsea and Everett. That would (1) provide excellent access north, south and west to and from Logan, and (2) remove all through traffic from the Central Artery, which then could be reduced to a surface street resembling Commonwealth Ave. With north-south rail and an Amtrak stop at Logan, the cost of such an undertaking might have been $2 or $3 billion, but not $7.7 billion.

Some of us tried to push a "Big Bridge" in the 1980's, but it was not to be. Business liked the third connection to Logan, labor liked 15 years of construction jobs, conservationists like their demands being genuflected to. When the Weld crowd took over all those State House desks from the Dukakis crowd, one of the first things they concluded was that, as they would now be running it, they had no political interest in derailing a Federally-funded project of this magnitude.

But it is a colossal boondoggle, which though funded predominantly by Federal highway revenues, is going to oblige the Commonwealth's taxpayers to come up with a billion or so before it's over — a detail no one wants to address. Meanwhile, the Feds are finally balking as the billions compound, and the Weld people are crying that the over-runs aren't their fault because they don't really have control of the project. That's bull. While massive over-runs were predicted by skeptics such as this writer, they cannot fairly be laid to Mike Dukakis and Fred Salvucci. Laid-back Bill owns them now.

Is it too late to scale this project back to sensible proportions? Probably is. Are we thus left with the spectacle of two of the brightest governors of the century (Mr. Harvard Law '60 and Mr. Harvard Law '70) judged as giving us the biggest boondoggle of the century? Probably are.

Unless, that is, in the greatest of ironies for Fred Salvucci, the fed-up Feds simply decide to accept what is mainly built and scrap the rest: open the new tunnel to Logan, scrap Scheme Z, and live with the Artery for another generation.

Dress Codes are non-issue in Cohasset

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

It's back to school time and you'll no doubt run into students and parents over at the mall, searching out the coolest of fall wardrobes.

But in many public school districts all over the country school bound youths are shopping for uniforms or whatever new "uniform" dress codes their schools have established. Many of these codes eliminate designer jeans, sneakers and baseball caps, all considered essential wardrobe elements for students in the 90's.

Unlike many other school districts across the country, Cohasset students can rest easy this fall knowing that school officials won't be limiting their fashion choices.

In Detroit, 10 year old Eric Adams was suspended for wearing a Chicago White Sox jacket to school. School officials maintained that Adams safety was at risk and by wearing the jacket he violated a new dress code that bans sportswear because it has been linked to gang violence.

According to the law in Massachusetts and based on a 1974 court ruling, "School officials shall not abridge the rights of students as to personal dress and appearance except if such officials determine that such personal dress and appearance violate reasonable standards of health, safety and cleanliness.

Quincy High School teachers and administrators have used the safety issue to enforce this year's ban on outer-wear at the school. In addition to being disruptive teachers claimed that bulky coats can catch fire in science labs, cause disputes, and be used to conceal weapons.

And while clothing related gang violence and gun smuggling is not a problem facing towns like Cohasset and Hingham, educator Thomas Campbell said there are definite benefits to a dress code in any public school system.

Campbell, a Hingham resident who has taught in the Boston public school system for 18 years, maintained that when students are neatly and appropriately dressed for school, they take learning more seriously. Campbell said that dress codes improve self-esteem, increase students' attention to school work and respect for peers and authority and improve classroom discipline.

Uniforms are not necessary, said Campbell who recommends a code requiring boys to wear a collared shirt and chino-style slacks and girls to wear skirts and dresses. Campbell's recommended code would exclude crew neck shirts, painters pants, halter tops, mini-skirts and T-shirts with messages that promote drugs, sex or violence.

Campbell maintained that sweat pants and T-shirts are for play time and school is a serious business.

"Students have to know that school is their job and putting on the proper clothes shows it's time for business and not fooling around."

Dress codes would certainly vary from one community to another, but Campbell said a dress code can work well in any public school.

Cohasset School Supt. Stephen E. Hart said Cohasset has and needs no dress code.

"Cohasset students dress in an acceptable way; it's not a problem here," he said.

High School Principal Mary Ellen Gallagher agreed, and said that communication between students and the administration on this issue has been excellent.

"We're fortunate here. Our students talk about these issues and are responsible," she said.

If a student wears something offensive to school, Gallagher said they are consulted and generally agree not to wear it anymore.

"Our students are thoughtful and if they understand that its offensive to others, they've voluntarily changed," she added.

In addition to T-shirts that might offend, Gallagher also spoke of baseball caps.

"Hats are a non-issue. Students can wear them to school but not in the classroom," she said, adding "our kids respect the rules."

High School senior Nick Wells also said that student dress has not been an issue at the school.

Cohasset parent Joseph Previte said that a dress code would be too limiting to students and that as long as kids go to school clean and neat, no code is needed. Previte who attended parochial school has no fond memories of uniforms.

"I went to Catholic school and we hated wearing uniforms," he said.

Mary-Ellen Maich, another Cohasset parent, said the focus of the school should be on the curriculum, especially in a time of budget cut backs. And while the curriculum should be the school's main priority, Maich said that if uniforms or a dress code were necessary or could eliminate distractions and peer pressure and allow students focus on academics she would be in favor of it.

But for now and in the foreseeable future students wardrobes will be up to them.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

The purple door with the brass door knocker resembling a fox's head and the small cement fox sitting on the front brick steps next to the pale lavender potted geranium announce you are definitely at the Fox residence — Kathy and Ed Fox, that it.

Another cement fox stands guard under the handing impatien near the American flag.

The deep purple clematis is breathtaking. It envelopes the pale grey lamppost and mailbox with the house number displayed on a small purple, oval sign. There is a fountain of bright yellow daylilies planted next to the mailbox complementing the deep purple of the clematis. More summertime color is on display in the perennial garden with stone rabbits and angels keeping company amidst the bank of orange daylilies.

It is easy to see that these wonderful color combinations were planted and planned — by design.

Condition of cemeteries deplorable

letters

(The following was sent to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen)

To the Editor:

I am writing you concerning the disgraceful condi-ns at Woodside Cemetery.

Last May I visited the cemetery and was very concerned about the condition of my family's lot — the Maynard lot. It was covered with a little green grass but primarily by a low-growing weed. I assumed that the condition would be corrected so did not contact you at that time.

Last Tuesday I again visited and was appalled by the deplorable condition of my family's lot. There was not one blade of green grass, a few blades of dried grass, but mostly just plain dirt. A general perusal of the cemetery showed a little green, but mostly dead greass.

As I am sure you know, the majority of those resting there were long-time, proud residents of Cohasset who still have descendants in the area who care about them as witnessed by the flowers planted individually on many of the graves.

I am well aware of the problems concerning cemeteries in Cohasset — my sister sent me the recent article in the Patriot Ledger regarding Beechwood Cemetery. There are the usual problems:

- shortage of money
- shortage of help
- shortage of water

But I can't help but feel that the problem is lack of priorities and commitment on your part and lack of supervision by you of those responsible for giving the care needed.

Was it Harry Truman who said, "The buck stops here?" I'm afraid the buck stops with you, the Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset, and hope that you will do whatever is necessary to correct the situation.

I look forward to hearing from you regarding your plans.

A sincere and heartbroken,
Florence Maynard Baker

Weld asked for train stance

Coastal Coalition co-founder Nancy Buckley said she was very encouraged by her recent informal commuter boat meeting with Governor William Weld.

Although the Governor said he would make no decisions on a transportation system for the South Shore until the Environmental Impact Study is complete, Buckley said he asked many questions to she and other Coalition members on board.

"We talked for a 1/2 hour on alternatives," said Buckley who maintained Weld's biggest interest was in building and operating costs of restoring rail service on the Greenbush line.

Weld has been criticized by pro and anti-train factions alike for dragging his feet on this issue and being non-committal on any of the alternatives. Buckley said that with the decision and public hearing being pushed back again, this time until December, it seems that the Governor does not want to touch this hot topic in an election year.

Following the meeting with Weld, Buckley and the Coalition met with Transportation Secretary James Kerisiotes and MBTA director John Haley. While this meeting was briefer than hoped for, Buckley said Kerisiotes and Haley showed interest in how the Coalition was formed and what alternatives to rail service they would suggest.

"Both Secretary Kerisiotes and the Governor heard us and understand that we're concerned with the cost to build and maintain a train that will have such a small ridership," Buckley said.

Buckley maintains that the demographics in this area are changing and less people will be working in the city.

"If only 21 percent of South Shore commuters work in Boston, why aren't we building a system that will help the other 79 percent," Buckley asked.

But Buckley and the Coalition, and the rest of the South Shore are going to have to wait a little longer to find out what system will ultimately move into town. In the meantime, Buckley said Coalition representatives will meet with the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Agency, the regional office of the Federal Transit Administration, and attempt to get a meeting with President Clinton's Secretary of Transportation Federico Pena.

Buckley said her group will continue to spread awareness and educate people about this volatile issue.

"It's an emotional issue because people don't have all the facts," she said.

Cohasset's Kerry Murphy is gearing up for another sailing season when she heads back to college this month. (Photo by Joe Reardon)

Murphy aims for sailing title

By Joe Reardon

Kerry Murphy admits she doesn't compete in as many sailing regattas as she used to.

An instructor at the Cohasset Sailing Club for the past six years, Murphy enjoys teaching the 10- to 15-year-olds in the 200-student program the fundamentals of letting the wind do most of the work in propelling their sail boats silently across the open water.

"We just teach them the basics, how to sail," said Murphy as she waited in the club house for the torrential downpour to let up so she could head back out on the water on this unseasonably chilly day.

Murphy may not do a huge amount of racing in the summer, but she does get in more than her share of quality competition as a member of the Saint Mary's College sailing team in Maryland.

And Murphy competes well.

At the Women's National Sailing Championships held in late May at Yale, Murphy crewed the winning boat in the B Division. The strong performance helped lead St. Mary's to a second-place overall finish, 13 points behind the winning Tufts University squad, the highest finish the team has ever had in the national meet after finishing third for three consecutive years.

But despite the squad's best finish in the school's history, Murphy couldn't help but have mixed feelings about the team's showing in the most important college race in the country. "We were definitely satisfied with second," Murphy said, "but we wanted to win. We were a little bit disappointed."

Murphy and the rest of the Saint Mary's team will head into this fall's season ranked second in the country, but with a burning desire to knock Tufts off its spot on the top step.

And Murphy, who has been sailing since she was 10, will be back in her more comfortable position of skipper when Saint Mary's heads into its first competition the second week of September.

The team will have very little time to prepare for the first race — one week at the most. Murphy is primed and ready to compete into November, the length of the autumn sailing season.

November, December and January are the only three months of the year Murphy doesn't set foot in a sail boat. The vacation is short-lived, however, as spring practice begins in February, weeks before the Red Sox head to Florida for spring training.

Unfortunately, unlike the Red Sox, the sailing team has to brave the elements and the numbing temperatures.

Needless to say, the winter months are hardly Murphy's favorite time of year to be out on the ocean with the

"There's a lot of interest in the event."

The C.Y.C., last hosted the championship in 1957 and it seems only fitting that the races be held in Cohasset in this, the club's 100th anniversary.

Wakeman said the C.Y.C., applied to U.S. Sailing, recognized as the national organization for sanctioned races, in October 1992. The yacht club was selected to host the championship later that fall and the preparations have been ongoing ever since.

The yacht club will not have a boat in the race. The New England region will be represented by Ida Lewis of the Newport Yacht Club in Rhode Island.

Wakeman said the only real variable during the competition will be the length of the courses. He said the boats will race anywhere from 4-8 miles, depending on the weather conditions of that particular day.

"There's no way to predict it," Wakeman said.

Cohasset has a long sailing tradition when it comes to women's racing. The championship of any kind for women was the Massachusetts Women's Sailing Championship, otherwise known as the Hodder Cup. It was won by two Cohasset sisters in 1924.

Frances McElwain Wakeman became the most prolific sailor in Adams Cup history by winning the event an unprecedented four times (1935-38). She has been a trustee of the the cup since 1950 and attends the finals every year.

Wakeman, then Frances McElwain, teamed with Katherine Johnson and Frances Williams for her first title on September 3, 1935. That year's championship was hosted by the Indian Harbor Yacht Club in Greenwich, Connecticut, through torrential downpours and gusty winds.

She went on to win the championship in Cohasset, New York and Edgartown over the course of the next three years.

Although she no longer races, Wakeman played a major role in bringing the races to Cohasset. She worked on fund-raising this year and has given much of her time shore-side activities. This year Wakeman will be hosting dinner for the championship crews in her home.

Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

There is at least one reader out there who apparently has little faith that today's youth will be able to make mature decisions as they grow older.

And you'd be startled were he lays the blame.

"A concerned parent" wrote to the Hanover Mariner last week with some legitimate complaints having to do with alleged coaching shenanigans in the Whitman Invitational Softball Tournament's championship game between Hanover and Brockton.

According to the letter, Brockton's 14-year-old squad took a 4-1 lead into the fourth inning, and as darkness approached, coaches Mike St. Jean and Dan Cobb called several time outs to talk with the Brockton batters individually.

The Hanover fans believed the coaches were delaying the game purposely, but the umpire saw differently. Hanover asked to stop the game at the end of the fifth inning because of darkness with Brockton holding a 4-2 lead. Both Cobb and St. Jean argued they wanted to continue the game because there were just two innings remaining and it would be tough to secure a field to finish the game the following day.

The umpire agreed with the Brockton coaches and the game continued as the playing conditions became tougher because of the fading light. However, Hanover made the best of the situation by staging a comeback to tie the contest, 4-4, heading into the seventh and final inning.

Although you could give the umpire the benefit of the doubt and call his decision a judgement call, his ensuing conduct, along with that of the two Brockton coaches, were the epitome of everything that is wrong with youth sports.

According to the letter, St. Jean and Dan Cobb then said it was too dark to play any further. They then added that it was too dark for the teams to have played the previous inning when, coincidentally, Hanover tied the game. The coaches took their protest one despicable step further and argued that the two runs Hanover scored shouldn't count and the score be reversed to the original 4-2.

The umpire, who should never be allowed to call balls and strikes again, agreed and the game resumed Sunday morning. Hanover had its two runs erased and Brockton went on to win the game and tournament, 4-2.

Hanover fans and players were understandably outraged with the way in which the umpire yielded to the two Brockton coaches without giving coach Griffiths of Hanover any latitude.

The author of the letter described the general mood of the Hanover players and the fans at the start of his last paragraph.

"During the sickening silence after the game, there were some people in the crowd that left much more saddened than others. These were the people that realized that 30 14-year-old girls were just taught a very ugly lesson in life by two Brockton coaches and one umpire."

The writer was absolutely correct. There's no doubt the Hanover girls were treated unfairly by having their comeback erased by the ludicrous decision of an umpire. They had every reason to leave the field feeling cheated, hurt and angry.

But the real injustice to the Hanover players and parents lies in the message the writer puts across in the letter's conclusion.

"A lesson that would leave a permanent scar on their souls. This scar will resurface later on in life when these young people cheat on school exams, cheat on their taxes and steal at their workplace...After all, they were taught to do so by two Brockton coaches and an umpire."

Obviously the author of the letter was frustrated, and rightfully so. But does he actually believe that any reader with a brain in his or her head is going to buy the argument of youth lost on a softball field?

Instead of turning what sounds to be a truly lousy experience into a positive by getting a message across that bad, unfair things happen and people will disappoint you, the author's letter implies that it is just a matter of time before these 14-year-old girls turn bad...all because of "two Brockton coaches and an umpire."

If his belief's are true, one can only accept the fact that these 14-year-old softball players are headed down the wrong road. But is anyone really buying a word of this dribble? I doubt it, and that includes the 14-year-old girls who should take the comments in the letter as nothing more than an insult. It sounds as though they're going to have an easier time getting over the defeat than the "Concerned parent." Fall sports are right around the corner and the girls aren't going to have the time to dwell on an unfair loss with a battery of soccer practices and games headed their way.

How he actually associates a bad experience in one softball game with stealing from a future employer is a mystery in itself. The Brockton coaches made more sense in their actions, as dirty as they were, than with his view of the future.

The letter was not only a slap in the face to the softball players, but to the parents who work hard raising their kids in a stable environment, making sacrifices for them along the way. Should we be led to believe these girls are going to turn sour because of softball flashbacks?

Sports are hardly real life. And although we can learn lessons on the playing field that can be applied to the real world, I hardly believe a girls softball game is the road leading to a life of cheating, lying and deceit.

These 14-year-old girls are smart enough to figure that out on their own.

Celebrity all-star hockey game draws huge turnout

By David McKee
Mariner staff

The First Annual C. Fred Fawcett Memorial Hockey Tournament was a smashing success as hundreds of fans turned out to watch NHL hockey stars and "Full House" TV star Dave Coulier lace up their skates for a good cause.

The tourney was held on Saturday, Aug. 20 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. Proceeds from the tourney went to the Fawcett Memorial Scholarship at Hingham High.

Fawcett, 39, passed away on Nov. 18. He was a former standout defenseman at Hingham High, class of '72 and also played varsity hockey at the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in '77.

On the day Fawcett was buried, his family talked about doing something to honor Fred's memory.

"We wanted to do something around hockey," his older brother Don Fawcett said. "So the idea of a game like this came up. This game will raise money for ıe scholarship, but more importantly, it will give all Fred's friends a chance to get together and remember him and all the good times he had on the ice."

Dave Coulier took a red-eye flight from filming his TV series to make the tourney on Saturday morning.

He was the hit of the day as fans cheered his every move and waited up to an hour to get his autograph after the game.

Coulier proved to be a solid hockey player and an affable fellow as he posed for numerous photos and signed hockey sticks, shirts and photos in the lobby of the rink after the final buzzer.

Two of the other big stars at the tourney were Bruins assistant GM Mike O'Connell, who is from Cohasset and former Canadien Chris Nilan, who makes him home in Hingham.

"I grew up with Fred and played hockey with him and I was very honored to be part of this," O'Connell said. "I got the call about the tourney and agreed right away. Hockey was such a big part of his life and I'm glad everyone was able to get out there and have a good time."

O'Connell hadn't laced up the blades for awhile.

"I haven't played since around Christmas," he said. "I'm going to feel this tomorrow."

As for Nilan, he was at the Pilgrim Rink when Fawcett collapsed with a heart attack in November.

"It was a terrible thing," he said. "I was in the other rink when it happened and it really shook up a lot of people. But I was very pleased to be a part of this. Freddy was a great guy and I'll do anything to keep his memory alive."

As for the hockey, Nilan gave it a thumbs up.

"There was some very good hockey out there," he said. "It was fun and everyone had a great time."

Former Canadien and Weymouth native Bobby Sheehan scored a big goal for the celebrity team in the final seconds of the last game to give his team a 4-3 victory.

Some of the other stars at the tourney included: Tony Amonte, of the Chicago Blackhawks, Marty McInnis of the New York Islanders, Tim Sweeney of the Anahiem Mighty Ducks, Kurt Walker of the Toronto Maple Leafs, Bill O'Dwyer of the Bruins, Steve Baker of the New York Rangers, Steve Rooney of the New Jersey Devils, Scott Harlow of the Canadiens, Tom Songin of the Bruins, Mike Breen of the Buffalo Sabres, Bobby Miller of the Bruins, Fred Ahearn of the Colorado Rockies, Mark Heaslip of the Rangers and Dave Silk of the Bruins.

Other teams in the tourney included: a UPenn alumni team, a Hingham team and several adult hockey teams.

Don Fawcett, 53, Fred's older brother also played in the tourney.

Many members of the Fawcett family attended the game. In addition to Don Fawcett, Fred's sister Leslie, as well as his wife Pat and his three children Frederick, Courtney and Wesley were there.

Don Fawcett credited Kevin Malloy, Hoby Taylor and Kurt Walker with getting the game organized.

wind whipping like a knife. "We have dry suits," she said. "The water's cold and the air's cold.

"It's not quite as cold as it is up here, but the whole month of February is cold."

Murphy had a solid high school career sailing after moving to Cohasset from Sharon. The Skippers finished second in the state her junior year and went on to repeat the same feat the following season.

The winters were still bitterly cold back then, but it has only made Murphy stronger and better able to deal with the tough conditions.

Mercifully, the nationals are scheduled to be held in California and Murphy is eager to race in the warm weather.

But the weather conditions come a distant second on her list of priorities.

"I want to win," Murphy said of the one finish that has eluded Saint Mary's.

Three thirds and a second are nice, but Murphy won't be truly satisfied until she wins the big one.

Driving range holds contest

Labor Day weekend the Cohasset Firefighters are holding a Hole-In-One contest at the new Cohasset Green Driving range.

The firefighters are trying to put together enough prizes so that everyone that gets onto the green will not leave empty-handed. In addition, there will be a cash prize awarded each day for the closest to the pin.

Advanced tickets at $10 are available for the Labor Day event, when a 1994 Chevrolet auto/truck will be presented for a hole-in-one.

For further information and advanced tickets with approximate tee times call 617/383-0616 or Lenny Davis at 617/585-5678.

Portions of the proceeds will go to Muscular Dystrophy and to the Local 2804 scholarship fund.

Sharks have openings

The Bay State Sharks Squirt Major hockey team, Metropolitan Boston Hockey League's defending champs, has openings for forwards, defensemen and goaltenders for the upcoming season. Players must have been born in 1984.

The Sharks offer the following:

- 39 games against some of the best competition in the state
- weekly power skating sessions, conducted by Igor Gratcher, formerly of the Russian Red Army Hockey Team
- two practices per week
- three-day pre-season clinic Aug. 29-31
- two tournaments

For more information call Greg Coady at 617/826-2993 or Bob Hatch at 617/982-0276.

Register for fall gymnastics

Now in its 17th year, the South Shore Community Center "Gymnast in Motion" will be taking registration in the gym August 28, 29 and 30 from 2 to 5 p.m.

The center offers a wide range of classes for boys and girls, all ages and abilities. Session 1 runs for a period of 12 weeks at $78. Classes begin the week of Sept. 5.

For more information, call the center at 383-0088. "Gymnasts in Motion" also offers a team program for USGF levels 4, 5, 6 and 8.

Trainers reduce on-the-field injuries

By Melody Howard
Special to the Mariner

Ask Braintree High School (BHS) Athletic Director Josef Schuhwerk why he needs a certified athletic trainer from the Braintree Hospital Rehabilitation Network (BHRN) at school every day, and Schuhwerk will respond with stories about how the trainer evaluated a soccer player's severe concussion during a BHS game and another student's broken leg. "We got those kids to the hospital in minutes because the trainer knew what to look for," Schuhwerk said. "The relationship has been outstanding."

BHS began contracting for a BHRN athletic trainer two days a week in 1987. Today, the BHRN trainer is a valued part of all BHS teams, providing injury prevention and treatment services; strengthening and nutrition education; fitness training; and free pre-season physicals to all student athletes at the school. The trainer also attends all BHS home games and provides on-the-field injury prevention, evaluation, and acute injury care. "We tell our coaches that whatever the trainer recommends regarding an athlete's injury status is what we go by," Schuhwerk asserts. "Having an athletic trainer there to care for daily injuries has also cut down on the need to call ambulance personnel unnecessarily."

The BHRN Sports Medicine Program (SMP) provides athletic training services to 14 area high schools and two local colleges, with more contracts on the way. Many of the BHRN trainers are also trained as physical therapists or physical therapy assistants, and each one works with as many as 350 to 400 athletes per season. The BHRN trainers are highly respected for their knowledge of sports injuries and their ability to help injured athletes return to play.

"Our goal in going into the schools is to ensure the health and safety of every athlete participating in a sport," notes SMP director Kathleen Fox, MA, ATC, PT, SCS. "When you have just one instance where a young person is in a life or death situation and the outcome is life, it changes the entire outlook on having a trainer around. One incident like that makes people realize that our trainers do more than tape ankles."

For example, take the experience of Jeri Anderson, LAT, C, who currently provides athletic training services to Brockton High School athletes and formerly worked at Braintree High School. In 1991, Anderson was on the sidelines during a Braintree High School soccer game in which a player broke both bones in her lower leg. "I stabilized it, packed the injury with ice, checked her pedal pulse, and watched for signs of shock until the ambulance arrived," Anderson recalls. "What you have to do is make sure the worst case isn't happening." In this instance, that meant ensuring that circulation to the player's foot was adequate. Anderson received a letter of commendation from the Braintree Public Schools for her quick response to this emergency, and a glowing letter from the player's mother for demonstrating concern "beyond the call of duty."

"Because you know the athletes, you realize more quickly when something isn't right," Anderson observes. "It's like having a sixth sense sometimes."

At Brockton High School, where BHRN athletic trainers have provided on-site services since 1986, on-the-field injuries have been reduced by 35 percent through a combination of increased coach and athlete education, and providing ongoing training in conditioning and stretching, strengthening, nutrition, flexibility and fitness.

In order to service a broader community, the SMP also conducts a free annual seminar for coaches and athletes to inform them about injury prevention and care. This year's seminar will take place Wednesday, Sept. 7, from 5:30 to 8:35 p.m. and will feature 1994 U.S. Olympic Team luger Jon Edwards of So. Weymouth as guest speaker. Registration information about the program may be obtained by calling (617) 848-5353, ext. 2231. The seminar will also offer workshops on sports nutrition; taping; injury prevention and care; and the effects of alcohol, tobacco and drugs on athletic performance.

To those who may question the need for having an athletic trainer on-site at schools, Fox offers this explanation: "In Braintree and Stoughton we had incidents on consecutive days where players got struck, one in soccer and the other in football, and each one suffered a ruptured spleen. If trainers had not been there to send these kids to the emergency room, the outcome could have been fatal. The emergency room doctors said we saved these kids' lives."

Additional information about BHRN athletic training services for schools may be obtained by calling (617) 848-5353, ext. 2152. The BHRN SMP provides comprehensive medical, therapeutic, and preventive services to injured and non-injured athletes. BHRN, the flagship hospital of Continental Medical Systems, Inc. is the largest single hospital-based rehabilitation system in the country.

Abutters give Shaw's Supermarkets food for thought problems beneath, including concerns with traffic and truck access and disagreement over just how to shield the new building.

Shaw's met with prospective neighbors at the request of the appeals board who asked the two parties to work out as many of their differences as possible before Shaw's continues a public hearing Sept. 22.

The supermarket magnate is seeking a special permit from the town to expand into a residential zone by approximately 160 feet, a move which has been opposed by several abutters. Shaw's land is divided into both a residential and commerical zone, and by town bylaw, 50 additional feet of commercial space could be gained without any hearing.

However, according to Shaw's real estate manager Brian Leahy, the store would need more room in the rear of the store for deliveries and a truck turnaround.

The site, known as Cushing Plaza, was developed in the '60s, and purchased by Shaw's nearly two years ago after it went into FDIC receivership. The land is under a state environmental order because of a failing septic system which requires Shaw's to pump weekly.

The redevelopment plan would include the demolition of the exisiting strip mall on Route 3A, and eventually, of the Walgreen's building, and the construction of a new, 70,000-square-foot store which would house Shaw's, Walgreen's, Buttonwood Books, a consignment shop and an unnamed number of other plaza tenants. A new septic system also would be installed.

Meeting with abutters Saturday, Shaw's contracted engineer, Larry Wagner, detailed design changes he has made to address abutter concerns.

The plaza entrance has been consolidated, with only one access/exit on Route 3A and one driveway on Beechwood Street. Leahy added that Shaw's is negotiating with the state to install a traffic signal at the 3A entrance, coordinating the system with the exisiting lights in the area to ease traffic congestion.

The new plans also moved the truck turnaround farther from Beechwood Street and restored as much as 60 feet of decidous trees between the rear of the store and Pine Ridge Road. However, because of the redesign, delivery trucks to Walgreen's would be routed through the Beechwood Street entrance, a change some residents view as negative.

A timber sound barrier has been added to the base of the earthen berm at the store's rear to shield truck noise. The loading area also has been sunk to bring delivery trucks in below eye level of neighbors, and keep security lights from shining into homes.

A pedestrian access and left turn lane also would be added at Route 3A, and Beechwood Street would be widened and a sidewalk installed. The entire property would be screened to varying extents with evergreen trees.

To accommodate as many plaza tenants as possible, Wagner said Shaw's would build the smallest store possible — 43,000 — square feet, leaving an additional 23,000 square feet of retail space available for lease.

Leahy said Shaw's would negotiate delivery schedules, which normally are from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m., with neighbors as well. Leahy also hired a P&B bus to take residents on a tour of Shaw's new Hanover facility, but at the end of the two-hour session, no one took him up on his offer.

While some neighbors seemed appeased by Shaw's concessions, others feared a new supermarket might turn their back road into a major thoroughfare. Residents speculated that more shoppers coming from the north would veer off Route 3A, taking King Street to Beechwood Street and the store, rather than following Route 3A and sitting through two traffic lights.

Already, they said, King Street has its fair share of racing cars and speed related accidents.

Leahy and Wagner presented the audience with figures from a Shaw's traffic study, but many disputed the findings as too conservative and called on Shaw's to install a sidewalk on King Street.

"I have three kids who cross the street to take the bus," said Beechwood Street resident Ellen Sanchez. "This has always been a bad area, and I think something has to be done about it."

But at least one abutter who attended Saturday's meeting favors the project.

"I feel it can only be an improvement," said Josephine Coleman of Beechwood Street. "And I feel a lot of people here are not here so much against the proposal but against having another supermarket."

Leahy said Shaw's will continue working with residents to resolve issues.

"It was a good meeting for clarification of what our proposal is," he said. "We'll study (traffic) further and see if we can make improvements to enhance the safety features. We want this to be a place people can come to and leave safely."

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 94P1815E1

Estate of YOLANDA I. BACCARI late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will and codicil of said decedent be proved and allowed and that DOMENIC M. BACCARI of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executor named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on September 7, 1994.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, Robert M. Ford, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this twenty-eighth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-four.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE

HINGHAM INSTITUTION FOR SAVINGS, Plaintiff, v
GEORGE MUIR III AND JUDY MUIR, Defendant.

By virtue and in execution of the Power of Sale contained in a certain mortgage given by George Muir III and Judy Muir to the Hingham Institution for Savings, a Massachusetts banking corporation, dated April 27, 1987, recorded with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds in Book 7549, page 574, of which mortgage the undersigned are the present holders, for breach of the conditions of said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing, the same will be sold at Public Auction at TWO O'CLOCK in the afternoon (2:00 p.m.) on Tuesday, September 13, 1994 on the premises below described being known as 122 Forest Avenue, Cohasset, Norfolk County, Massachusetts, to wit:

The land with the buildings thereon, situated on the westerly side of Forest Avenue, Cohasset, Norfolk County, Massachusetts, being shown as Lot U-U on a plan entitled "Compiled Plan of Lots and Easements on Forest Ave., for Dr. Roger Pompeo, Cohasset, Mass.", dated March 4, 1980, by Edwin A. Young, Registered Land Surveyor, and filed with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds as Plan No. 270 of 1980 in Plan Book 280 to which plan reference in here made for a more particular description. Containing, according to said plan, 1.195 acres, more or less.

This conveyance is made subject to reservations, rights of way, covenants and easements of record, if any, now in force and applicable.

Being the same premises conveyed to the Mortgagor by deed of George Muir III recorded with Norfolk Deeds in Book 6226, Page 182.

Said premises are also conveyed subject to and with the benefit of all outstanding tax titles, municipal or other public taxes, assessments or liens, if any.

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS ($10,000.00) will be required to be paid in cash or by certified check by the purchaser at the time and place of sale, as earnest money. The balance is to be paid in cash or by certified check within twenty (20) days thereafter, to be deposited in escrow with Kevin W. Gaughen, Esq., at 528 Broad Street, East Weymouth, Massachusetts, 02189, pending approval of said sale by the Court. Other terms, if any, are to be announced at the sale.

Business people needed for trip

Weymouth, Massachusetts, August 9, 1994 — Would you be interested in an expense-paid trip to the French Riviera? If so, consider applying to participate in the 1995 Group Study Exchange Program of the Rotary Foundation.

The program is being conducted by Rotary District 7950 to promote international understanding through person-to-person contact. A team of four business and professional men and women will be chosen to travel to Nice, France, and the Principality of Monaco, where they will study their hosts' way of life and observe their own professions as practiced there.

Commissioner voices urgent need for foster families

DSS Commissioner Linda K. Carlisle today announced an urgent need for foster homes in the Commonwealth. "Due to an explosion of substance abuse and domestic violence, there are now 13,500 children in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts who are living in foster care, group homes and emergency shelters. These children have suffered the plight of abuse and neglect and are not able to live with their own families. In every city and town across Massachusetts, temporary foster homes are desperately needed," said Commissioner Carlisle.

The need is greatest for families willing to take:

* teenagers;
* sibling groups;
* children with educational, medical and emotional needs;
* drug-affected babies; and
* linguistic and ethnic minorities.

Foster children range in age from infancy to late teens. Their backgrounds cross all ethnic and religious lines. Increasing numbers of infants and toddlers are entering foster care. The Department of Social Services caseload is dramatically impacted by a variety of issues including domestic violence and the escalating use of drugs and other substances in many families, which affects their ability to care for their children.

Foster parents must be good communicators, able to problem solve and express, accept and understand feelings. They must possess the maturity and capacity to provide for the physical and emotional needs of a child in crisis and must be willing to work cooperatively with a professional team. The goal is to reunite the child with his/her birth parents as soon as this is possible, and when this isn't possible, to place the child in an adoptive home. In the case of an older child, the goal may be to prepare him or her for independent living.

Foster parents complete a 30-hour training program entitled, "Massachusetts Approach to Partnerships in Parenting" (MAPP). This is co-led by a social worker and an experienced foster parent. The program helps prospective foster parents understand the needs of foster children and their families.

Foster parents receive a daily reimbursement for each foster child in their home and there is coverage of the child's dental and medical expenses. There are no income requirements and foster parents can own their own home or rent; foster parents can be married or single.

Commissioner Carlisle stated, "Foster parenting isn't an easy job. The children have gone through a lot and it will take a lot for them to feel loved and be loving again. But the rewards of foster parenting can be great."

People interested in learning more about becoming foster parents and joining the Department of Social Services foster care program should call the Foster Parent Recruitment Line: 1-800-345-4343.

E-911 and new fire district should dovetail

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Cohasset selectmen will ask their counterparts in area towns to join them in pushing for state help with regionally establishing the E-9-1-1 emergency telephone system.

The state has mandated that every town install E-9-1-1 by the end of 1995.

But selectmen see an expensive problem on the horizon if Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Hull and Scituate — the five towns in the proposed Seaside Fire and Rescue District — each set up E-9-1-1 dispatch systems which would have to be re-installed later on a regional basis once the fire district is established.

The proposed regionalized fire district is at least two years away, according to Hull Fire Chief Nick Russo, who sits on the Seaside fire consolidation study committee.

Selectman Peter Pratt wrote a draft letter which was reviewed by selectmen Monday on regional E-9-1-1 planning issues to be sent to other boards of selectmen in the proposed Seaside district. The final draft should be ready by the board's next meeting Sept. 12.

With E-911 around the corner, Pratt's letter stressed that officials act quickly.

"Unless we all begin work immediately toward the scheduled regional implementation of E-9-1-1 in the near future

Cohasset goes back to school Sept. 8

By Alice C. Coyle

When the first period bell rings next Thursday, School Supt. Stephen Hart estimates that 1,193 students will take a seat for the first day of school.

Enrollment is up by 50 students, Hart said, and concerns about the increasing student population has prompted the development of a space utilization study this fall.

At Osgood Elementary Principal Linda Whitney said "we're trying to creatively manage our space needs, but we're tight and have no additional classroom space. In fact, art and music classes share a room and the new technology lab which will house Macintosh computers and provide interactive learning materials for kids, has taken over a former classroom and bathroom. New staff members at Osgood will help meet some of the needs of the growing student population.

"We're trying to grow within the confines we have here," said Whitney, adding "we're really busting at the seems."

The space study recommendation came from the Osgood Elementary School Council, which like other Cohasset school councils formed through

Use of altered license alleged in beer buy

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Selectmen will ask the police chief to review a convenience store videotape of a liquor sale to look for possible clues as to whether or not a minor presented identification before purchasing beer last month.

But according to Karen McKim, owner and manager of Cohasset Food Mart, the videotape will be of little help because the surveillance camera was placed in such a way that the customer's face and shoulders are obscured by the overhead cigarette rack.

Selectmen decided to check the videotape anyway following a liquor hearing Monday when 20-year-old minor and a sales clerk told the board conflicting stories about what happened July 22 before police arrested three youths for minor transport of alcohol.

As the town licensing authority, selectmen have the right to modify, suspend, revoke or cancel a liquor license if the board finds satisfactory proof of the allegations, Executive Secretary Gregory Doyon said.

Cohasset Officer David Cogill said that Steven Terry, 20, of 32 Margin Street, purchased a case of beer from Cohasset Food Mart in Jonathan Livingston Seagull Plaza on July 22. Terry drove off in a white honda with Brendon McCarthy, 20, of 127 Pleasant St., and Christian Anderson, 19, of 47 Ann Vinal Rd. in Scituate. The three were arrested a few minutes later at Rte. 3A and Crocker Lane.

Steven Belivau, 34, the clerk who made the sale, said Terry presented a Massachusetts driver's license showing he was 22 years old. Belivau said Terry had been in before to purchase alcohol and presented the driver's license each time. He said the license did not look like it had been tampered with to change the birthdate.

"I had no reason to be suspicious of the license," Belivau said.

Terry said he did not present any identification to the clerk and after a search police did not find an ID on

Cohasset's week

Neighbor questions tent

A neighbor of the South Shore Music Circus has appealed the building inspector's decision allowing a temporary tent in front of the playhouse.

The zoning board of appeals has scheduled a hearing on the matter at 8 p.m. tonight (Sept. 1), at town hall.

Robert V. Davenport of 135 Sohier St. questions the use of the new, smaller tent on the music circus property which is used occasionally for corporate or birthday parties.

He claims it is an extension of a non-conforming use in the residential neighborhood.

In another zoning matter, Frances, Anthony, Jeanette and Albert Emanuello of Cohasset want to use the property at 71 Hull St. and Lambert's Lane as a storage yard for construction equipment.

Assessment is reduced

The South Shore Regional School District has reduced its assessments to the eight-member towns by $97,000, according to treasurer Robert Kelley.

Cohasset's reduction totals $504. Payments of $4,455.50 will be due in three installments for a total of $13,366.50.

Water bills due Sept. 15

Water/Sewer bills were mailed Aug. 15. Payments are due in the office of the Collector of Taxes by 7 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 15. Checks should be payable to the Town of Cohasset and mailed to P.O. Box 296, Cohasset 02025-0296.

The bill reflects usage from May 1 to Aug. 1. May and June consumption was calculated at the Fiscal 1994 rates while July was calculated at the new rates voted at town meeting in March.

The unpaid Fiscal 1994 charges are being handled separately and will not show on your new 1995 bill.

Warrants will be served in August on unpaid Fiscal 1994 water/sewer charges. When a warrant is served in person, collector's and deputy collector fees in the amount of $28 are added to the unpaid balance. Any 1994 bills that remain unpaid on Nov. 15 will be subject to a lien on the 1995 real estate bill and a $50 lien penalty will be added to the total amount due.

Warrants will also be served in August on 1994 Real, Personal Property and Boat Excise.

Building Inspector Robert Egan says the basic structure of the West Corner Fire Station shown here is sound. The building, which abuts Straits Pond and the Weir River, has no electricity and no sanitary disposal system. However, the selectmen's office has been contacted by a party who is interested in leasing the structure from the town. Selectmen will explore what the town can do with the building, which is now used for storage of some town equipment, to see if leasing it is feasible. Egan said the cost of exterior repairs including labor and materials would be about $1,400 and it would cost about $2,000 to install a heating system.

Bill payment approved

This week selectmen approved payment of $1,760.63 to Tutela Engineering Associates for engineering work for the sewer commission.

The clerk's office will be closed at noon Monday Sept. 19 to prepare for the election.

For more information call the clerk's office at 383-9900, ext. 105, 106 or 107.,

Troika makes appointments

Town Moderator George L. Marlette recently announced that the following citizens were appointed by serve the town by the "troika" which is made up of Marlette, Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan, and Advisory Committee Chairman Nancy A. Roth:

Kathleen R. Fox, 8 Black Rock Rd., and Gordon S. Hislop, 72 Jeruslaem Rd. (Design Review Board); Mark A. Baker, 32 Nichols St. (Capital Budget Committee); Louis F. Eaton, Jr., 30 Beach St. (By-Law Committee); Michael E. Tetreault, 171 South St.(Personnel Committee).

Several vacancies remain to be filled: Advisory Committee (one), Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government (three). Interested individuals my contact any member of the "troika."

Fire status report

In Fire Chief Roger W. Lincoln's July status report to selectmen, he said that the new Pierce pumping engine arrived July 13. Placement of lettering and operational training will take place before the engine is placed into service, he explained.

Lincoln said the fire department recently purchased a combination color TV/VCR to be used for training programs and fire prevention/public safety presentations. Several new video cassette training programs covering subjects such as large diameter hose, fire behavior, ladders, ventilation, rescue techniques, and safety standards will be used in conjunction with the new audio visual equipment.

Currently, all members of the fire department are being provided with "Gear Bags." The canvas bags are used to isolate soiled and contaminated firefighting gear from the sanitized areas of the ambulance. Also, when firefighters carry their turn-out in personal automobiles, contamination is avoided, Lincoln said.

SENATOR
BRIAN

MAKING
DIFFERENCE

Two years isn't a long time,
But, it's been long enough
for Brian McDonald to do this:

- Reduce rush-hour openings of the Fore River Bridge
- Secure over $62,000,000 in additional local aid for more police, firefighters and teachers.
- Save taxpayers $45,000,000 by fighting special interest bond bills
- Secure $1.5 million to pay for South Shore dredging projects
- Force the state to move forward with Greenbush Commuter rail restoration
- Secure $1.5 million funds to develop the new Abigail Adams State Park
- Pass legislation restricting X-rated video stores
- Secure over $58,000,000 in MWRA rate relief
- Work for the passage of the tough, new "Truth in Sentencing" Law

THE SOUTH SHORE NEEDS
TWO MORE YEARS OF BRIAN McDONALD

our communities will have no choice but to install E-9-1-1 individually now and re-install it later on a regional basis as our goal of fire regionalization is reached," Pratt wrote.

Regionalized E-9-1-1 could save the each of the five towns money, Cohasset selectmen said. Although the state provides the equipment and the phone company pays for some of the training costs, Cohasset will spend $140,000 in personnel and expenses the first year of E-9-1-1 — costs that could be reduced with regionalization of the service, selectmen said.

In addition to timetables for getting E-9-1-1 on line — the state must also approve and there must be an available budget from the telephone company — to allow individual centers to be reconfigured after initial installation, selectmen said.

"Our towns may have to wait in line for months or years to receive (state) approval and support from NYNEX," Pratt said.

Selectmen met with Gov. Weld's cabinet last month and were encouraged by a conversation with the assistant secretary of the Executive Office of Public Safety who offered to work with the region to find a solution.

If the other boards of selectmen agree — a regional task force will be set up and will report back in about 45 days with estimated budgets for E-9-1-1 regionalization and a realistic implementation schedule for the service.

The five towns began studying fire regionalization more than a year ago as a way to improve service and be more cost efficient.

Terry or in the car in which he was a passenger. Terry would not say if he had used a fake ID in the past to buy alcohol.

McKim alleged there is "some game playing here.

"I was told in the hallway (before the hearing) the false license was destroyed," she said.

McKim, who has been in the convenience store business for about six years and bought Cohasset Food Mart last spring, said it is store policy to check the ID of anyone who looks under 30 years old. Both McKim and Belivau said they had taken a training course that included tips on what to look for to spot fake IDs.

Selectmen took the matter under advisement until their Sept. 12 meeting.

Manager change approved

Linda Tew is the new manager of Papa Gino's in Cushing Plaza, selectmen learned this week. Tew, a Duxbury resident, has worked for Papa Gino's for 6-1/2 years and replaces Mark Cimino at the Cohasset restaurant. The corporate name of Papa Gino's has also been changed from Papa Gino's Acquisition Corp. to Papa Gino's Inc. Selectmen approved the beer & wine license transfer Monday night.

Raises are awarded

Selectmen approved step rate increases this week for Police Officer Lisa Matos, whose annual salary goes from $32,099 to $33,121 effective Sept. 23; and for Council on Aging Director Kathy Bryanton who is making $18.66 up from $17.83 an hour. Bryanton's increase was effective July 1.

GOP Senate hopefuls talk about Greenbush and toppling McDonald

By Rob Rogers
Mariner correspondent

State senatorial candidates Bob Hedlund, Don Hussey, and Carolyn C. Van Tine may hold different opinions on the Greenbush line, but all three agree on what they consider to be the most important issue in the '94 campaign: uniting local Republican support to topple incumbent Sen. Brian McDonald (D-Weymouth).

"One of the three people in this room will be the next senator from this district," said Hingham Republican town committee chairman Cal Harris, who organized a recent debate at the Broad Cove Club in Hingham. "Whichever one of them wins the primary will have the 100 percent support of the others in winning the election. We need to redouble our efforts from '90 and '92."

Despite this show of unity, the three candidates differed greatly in terms of background, motivation, and positions on such crucial issues to area voters as the prospect of major railway construction in their backyards.

"This is a frustrating issue," said former state senator Hedlund. "While I agree that this region is very poorly served by mass transit, I'm not sure that spending money on a revival of the Greenbush spur, with or without a tunnel, makes sense. I think in the 20th century we can do better than to follow 19th century right of ways. Unfortunately, the fix is in. There's very little one individual can do at this point. What I will do is to ensure that the impact on the community from this project is as minimal as we can make it."

Caroline "C.C." Van Tine, a Hingham lawyer, shared Hedlund's caution toward the train without sharing his condemnation of it.

"I've always been in favor of the train," Van Tine said. "I think it's a good thing with a positive impact for the South Shore. But having a balanced budget is an equally good thing. If the cost of the project turns out to be five times the number of the original estimate, for example, I would not be for the train."

"The MBTA has not proven to me that the train is going to be safe," said Don Hussey, a former Norwell teacher and state worker with experience in the area of highway safety. "With 43 grade crossings, safety is the most important component of this project. If a child was killed at one of those grade crossings, I could never forgive myself if I had allowed the project to go through. I'm putting the MBTA on notice right now: it had better be safe."

The candidates unanimously disagreed with another recent senate proposal: the introduction of a graduated income tax.

"I can't believe this initiative was brought forward," Hussey said. "It goes against the kind of self reliance, hard work, and achievement epitomized by the people in this room."

"It would cause an incentive problem," said Van Tine. "It does say to the taxpayer not to work that extra 20 hours."

"It's an issue of trust," said Hedlund. "Can we trust legislators to institute a fair tax who have already given themselves midnight Halloween pay raises and golden parachutes upon retirement? I don't trust the Massachusetts legislature."

Hedlund's last statement met with thunderous applause.

On the issue of abortion, all three candidates agreed that, whatever their personal opinions on the matter, an attempt to enforce restrictions on abortion would violate the Constitutional separation of church and state.

"Abortion under any circumstances is a tragedy," said Hussey. "However, women should not be subjected to someone else's morality. The Constitution says that church and state must be separated."

At the same time, however, Hussey claims that the main focus of his campaign will be an attempt to restore moral stability to a society riddled with social problems.

"John Adams said that a free society must have a religious, moral foundation," Hussey explained. "We have drive-by shootings, condoms in schools, victims

Recollections of a shipwreck on our shores

By David Wadsworth, Senior Curator
Cohasset Historical Society
Special to the Mariner

In October, 1849, an Irish "famine ship" bound from Galway to Boston ran into a severe northeast storm as it approached the coastline of Massachusetts. Carrying a full compliment of passengers and crew, many of whom were from the Galway area, the sailing vessel anchored near the approaches to Boston Harbor in an attempt to ride out the storm.

Its anchors failed to hold, the ship soon struck a submerged ledge, and a tragedy ensued that still is talked about on both sides of the Atlantic. The famine ship was the brig St. John, the ledge was a treacherous granite outcrop called the "Grampuses," and the site of the shipwreck was Cohasset's rocky shoreline.

Of those aboard the Irish brig, ninety-nine souls perished and the survivors numbered just over twenty. Galway built, St. John was owned on the island of Lettermullen, some thirty or more miles out in Galway Bay. The owner was Lettermullen's Tony Conneelly, and the Master of the ship on that voyage was Capt. Oliver, whose first name never appears on the records, but he may have been from Galway.

Passengers and crew came mainly from the counties of Galway and Clare, and many families were represented in the passenger list. Passengers included both singles traveling individually and either entire families or parts of families from that area. Some had relatives already in the new world, but some were the first of their family to venture across the sea seeking refuge from the famine.

Near the St. John that day off the Cohasset shore was another brig of British registry named Kathleen. Its anchors had also failed to hold and that vessel too was being inexorably pushed toward the rocky shores. But by that particular stroke of fate which determines the destiny of those upon the sea, Kathleen would completely miss the dangerous rocks and would find safety on the sandy shore near Cohasset Harbor. Only yards distant, St. John suffered the opposite fortune and struck full upon the Grampuses. Attempts to free the vessel failed and the pounding waves began to split open its hull.

In desperation, St. John's crew cut away masts and rigging in an attempt to lighten the ship, but to no avail. A ship's boat was launched only to be smashed by the raging seas, and some drowned.

Within an hour, the vessel's hull itself had broken into fragments and no longer was visible from the shore. Horrified watchers could see only great raftlike sections of the ship rising and falling with the waves as they drifted slowly toward the shore. Upon one of these sections, there huddled a pitifully few half-drowned persons who eventually would be counted among the survivors. Of the rest, only the ship's Captain Oliver, a few crew members and a handful of passengers were able to launch the vessel's longboat and gain safety upon dry land.

Ashore, a 19-year-old girl named Elizabeth Lothrop witnessed the entire tragedy in shocked dismay. But then she calmly began to prepare her parents' home to receive whatever survivors there might be. The family home, near Cohasset's Sandy cove, was a summer hotel, one of the many which lined our shores during the mid-19th century.

Clean sheets and blankets and boiled water were brought out and carefully placed, ready for use. Elizabeth's father, Capt. Daniel Tower Lothrop, a Cohasset seafarer, had departed earlier for Cohasset Harbor to assist the Humane Society's volunteer lifeboat crew in an attempt to reach the site of the disaster.

Later, Elizabeth Lothrop would write in her diary of the "horrible shipwreck" and described the appalling power of the stormy sea as it tore the large vessel asunder, seemingly with ease. When the first survivors arrived at the Lothrop House, they were "half-drowned, more dead than alive," and in lamentable condition.

As for the Cohasset lifesavers, they launched the Humane Society lifeboat at Whitehead near the entrance of Cohasset Harbor. Struggling through tumultuous seas into the teeth of the gale, the big rowboat headed for the Grampuses. Subsequently, Capt. Lothrop would write a detailed explanation stating why the lifesavers never did reach the sunken ship. When part of the way there, they saw the St. John's longboat with Capt. Oliver and the survivors heading past them for the shore. No attempt was made by the longboat's occupants to inform the lifesavers of the presence of others at the site of the wreck.

Soon seeing the other drifting brig Kathleen, which was flying distress signals, the exhausted lifesavers veered off to assist that vessel, unaware that scores of persons may still have been clinging to the wreckage of St. John.

Only later did those on shore become aware of the magnitude of the loss of life at the ledge. In any event, the volunteer lifeboat could have rescued only a total of twenty people, the maximum number it could hold.

In the appalling disaster which befell the brig from Galway, entire families were wiped out; Patrick Sweeney drowned while trying to save his wife and nine children, none of whom survived. Of the survivors, two were taken to the Cohasset Almshouse, where they could receive intensive medical attention.

A week later, Elizabeth Lothrop visited the almshouse and was heartened to see the two women much improved. For the victims, a service was conducted by Father Roddan of Quincy, and about 45 unidentified victims were buried in a grave at Cohasset's Central Cemetery.

Years later, in 1914, the Ancient Order of Hibernians placed a 20-foot Celtic Cross of granite atop the becoming the criminal and criminals becoming the victim. Those are all problems. What I would like to do is to win some small measure of victory for humanity."

Hedlund, who lost the Senate seat to McDonald in 1992, sees his primary goal as supporting the efforts of Gov. William Weld to institute change within the state government.

"No senator voted with Weld more than I did," Hedlund said. "I want to continue to tighten the eligibility requirements for welfare, to put a cap on PAC contributions, and to cut the pay and the perks of legislators. We need term limits, and diversity in the Senate. Half of the senators are attorneys right now who can use Capitol Hill as a place to make connections."

Van Tine, displeased by Hedlund's remarks, reminded her fellow candidate that Abraham Lincoln was a lawyer, and described the impetus behind her candidacy as a revolt against the "unimpressive" tenure of Sen. McDonald.

"We can do better," Van Tine said. "As chairman of the ethics board, Sen. McDonald never even called a hearing. He didn't do his job, didn't earn the money he was paid by the people of this state, and I think he should return it. I'd like to see the death penalty returned. I'd like to see welfare put people back on their feet and not serve as a way of life. I'd like to live in a community free from crime. I'd like to see a two-thirds majority roll call for all votes on taxes, and no more of the back-room tinkering we've had so far."

Whatever their motivation, each candidate agreed that Republican success in '94 is incumbent upon increased registration of new voters, particularly younger voters.

"I think the message I bring, the libertarian Republican message of less government, will attract younger voters," Hedlund said.

"I want to get them involved by educating them about politics, showing them that it's actually a good time and that the benefits are worthwhile," said Van Tine.

"My son and daughter got involved in politics because I did," Hussey said. "I was a schoolteacher. I know how to motivate kids coming into adulthood, if you give me the job."

The Plymouth-Norfolk Senate district, incorporating the towns of Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Weymouth, and half of Braintree holds its primary September 20. For more information, contact the Massachusetts State House's elections office at (617) 727-2828.

GOP to use lot

The Republican Town Committee obtained permission from selectmen this week to use the Sandy Beach parking lot for parking only from 4 to 8 p.m. Sept. 18. The group's annual cookout will be held at the Guild home on Jerusalem Rd. that late afternoon and evening.

cemetery's highest hill in memory of those lost. Some time after the shipwreck, the girl Elizabeth Lothrop, in a saddened, somber train of thought, confided to her diary that, having witnessed the awful event from beginning to end that day, she feared her life could never be as happy and carefree as it had been before. She wrote of a sense of profound sadness that seemed never to depart.

Thus, the sinking of those on the vessel itself also touched those who watched and tried to help.

Today, some 145 years after the occurrence, Cohasset is sometimes visited by residents of the island of Lettermullen and Galway, who have heard the story of Tony Conneelly's ship St. John, and its ill-fated company, who perished long ago upon the very threshold of a new and better world.

Stephen Goodyear of Deep Run, Cohasset, was honored recently for 25 years of teaching at University College, Northeastern University's part time undergraduate division. The award was presented by Assistant Dean Rose Doherty, director Liberal Arts and Criminal Justice Programs.

Mr. Goodyear teaches Italian, French and Spanish courses at the Boston campus. Retired from the Hull Public Schools where he was Head of the Foreign Language Department, He has published a book on Italy and contributed articles on language, travel and critique in the various regional publications and local newspapers.

Congratulations!

Fran Dorr stopped by this week for a quick visit, it was great to see her! She was happy to tell us that she had sold her Scituate home, unhappy that she will be leaving the immediate area however. Fran will be in the fine state of Maine for the fall, then she will be heading south to Florida. South of Orlando is where she will be located, there is a wonderful retirement community there. One more nice person to visit while on vacation during the cold months!

In fact, it seems that there could almost be a "mini Cohasset" in that state! Anyway, we surely hope that your life is happy, Fran, and thank you for all that you have done for our youth and their parents over the years. You and Evie were one very special couple!

We want to wish a wonderful life to Joe McCullough and his bride-to-be, Linda McLaughlin. Joe and Linda will be married next week, hope the day is a beautiful one, and your lives successful and happy.

Keep in touch, let us know your news!

Fall has arrived, folks! Double sessions are underway, schools are freshly painted, new clothes neatly put away and mothers smiling! Keep your news coming!

Another sure sign of fall, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is looking for local businessmen and women to donate their products into their "packages from home" goody bags. In case you aren't aware, each year the chamber sends a box to each recent graduate at their college or other home away from home. If you have a lightweight item that you would like to have included, contact Bob Martin at 383-0787.

We hear that David Infusino caught quite a large fish last week! The next cast didn't prove to be as successful however; the fish he hooked "got away" with every bit of his line!

We hear that David is still enjoying his first year as an ace fisherman though!

The South Shore Art Center recently named Lesley Grilli as the 1994 Volunteer of the Year. Lesley was so named for her many hours of work, helping with not only the art, but also with all of the paperwork involved and with keeping information flowing smoothly. Every successful organization needs lots of good people, and the Art Center is indeed lucky to have Lesley.

Hats off to Stephen Goodyear, who was honored by University College, Northeastern University's part-time undergraduate division. He has been teaching there for 25 years; Italian, French and Spanish courses are his Ann Leonard of Cohasset was at the State House on May 18 for the Great Massachusetts Workout. After a visit with state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, Ann was chosen to power walk with Gov. Mom needed a helping hand... not a nursing home.

We all knew Mom was slowing down and could use some help, but even her doctor said she didn't need a nursing home. While she knew she could rely on us, Mom insisted she didn't want to be a burden to her children.

That's why we're all so glad she found a beautiful new home at Allerton House. Assisted living is a wonderful alternative: Mom gets the help she needs to stay as independent as possible, and she's already made a number of new friends.

The Cohasset firefighters have a great idea for this Labor Day weekend, they are holding a Hole-In-One contest at the new Cohasset Green driving range. There will be a cash prize awarded each day for the one closest to the pin, and they are attempting to get prizes for all that get onto the green.

$10 is the price for tickets purchased in advance (call 383-0616 or Lenny Davis at 585-5678). The proceeds will go to the Muscular Dystrophy Assoc. and to the Local 2804 scholarship fund.

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Ben Berger this week, hope that your day was a great one!

We wish Kerry Murphy great success as she heads off for Saint Mary's College. She will be a member of the sailing team again.

As most of you sailors know, Kerry has been an instructor at our Sailing Club for the past six years, so she is sure to have many cheering her on as she competes (even though Saint Mary's is in Maryland, we will be watching the results of her team). Everyone thanks you for all that you taught them, Kerry, hopefully you'll be there for them again next year!

Choral group on cable

The Junior Voices, a South Shore children's choral group with several Cohasset members, performed in Seattle, Wash. with The Mercer Island Children's Choir, a Seattle-based group.

The story behind this cross-country concert will be aired on Continental Cablevision's Channel 53 at 9 p.m. Sept. 6 and Wednesday Sept. 14; and at 6 p.m. Saturday Sept. 10.

"Singing Sea to Sea: The Junior Voices Visit to Mercer Island, Wash.," produced by Margo Euler, relates the experience for all the children and allows viewers to hear the music produced by these groups.

Auditions are slated

The Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell will hold auditions for "A Christmas Carol" beginning at 1 p.m. Sunday Sept. 11. Auditioners will be asked to come prepared to sing, dance and possibly read from the script. People of all ages who are strong choral singers are needed.

The performances of "A Christmas Carol" will run November 25 through December 11.

For information call 871-2787.

Perhaps you sent a lovely card
Or sat quietly in a chair
Perhaps you sent a floral piece
If so, we saw it there
Perhaps you spoke the kindest words
As any friend could say;
Perhaps you were not there at all,
Just thought of us that day.
Whatever you did to console our hearts
We thank you so much whatever the part.

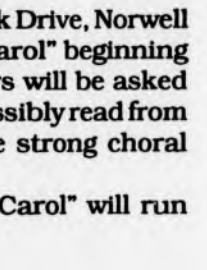
The Hearing Center

Have You Heard?



by Nancy Allonen-Allie, M.S., CCC-A
Licensed-Certified Audiologist

STRIKE UP THE MULTI-BAND

When fitting a hearing instrument to its user, a dispenser will attempt to selectively amplify certain frequencies in accordance with the user's hearing loss configurations. Among the methods used to accomplish this frequency amplification in conventional hearing instruments is to adjust the tone control (treble or bass). On the other hand, multi-band hearing instruments lend themselves to greater fine-tuning of the amplification pattern than do conventional, single-band hearing instruments. Multi-band instruments permit adjustment of the low frequencies independently of the higher frequencies. Beyond that, the cross-over points (where the high and low bands meet) may be varied in accordance with the configuration of the user's hearing loss.

All of the technology that is involved in the fitting and making of a hearing aid may seem confusing, but please be assured that the professionals at THE HEARING CENTER use the most up to date and state of the art equipment to ensure that the hearing aid you choose is the best one for you. We carry a variety of different brands of hearing aids to best suit your individual needs. Please call us at 1-800-339-9316. Our offices are conveniently located at 306 Washington St. (Rte. 53), Norwell, and 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3-A), Quincy. We would like to wish all of our friends and readers a safe and happy Labor Day!

P.S. By adjusting the band width, selective amplification within the band, and maximum output on a multi-band instrument, it is possible to fit users with different types of hearing losses.

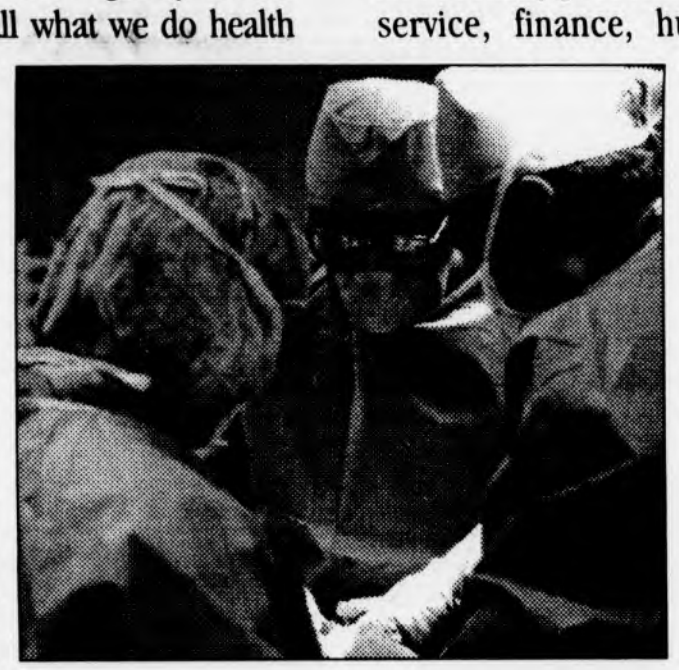
You Store It - Lock It And You Keep The Key!

We'd Like To Thank The 2,613 People Who Have Made This Operation A Success.

At South Shore Hospital, our mission is to deliver more than quality health care. We like to call what we do health caring. And this not-so-subtle difference is the direct result of 2,613 dedicated people who work around the clock to assure we're here when you and your family need us most.



It takes lots of different people to make our operation a success. Physicians, nurses, technicians, and therapists. Clinicians, pharmacists, technologists, aides, patient registration personnel and social workers. Homemakers, transcriptionists, educators, nutritionists and clerical staff.

Engineers, attendants, secretaries, and security personnel. Environmental service, finance, human resources, information systems and maintenance staff. Fund raisers, site and materials personnel all helped by hundreds of volunteers. And the list goes on.

So whether it's acute or outpatient care in the hospital, or health care provided by our visiting nurses in the comfort of your home, the caring people who are South Shore Hospital are here for you, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Even on Labor Day.

Happy Labor Day To All Who Work For Your Good Health.

Alan, Buzz, Chris, & Paul

There's no question our talented staff photographers Alan Chapman, Buzz Wadsworth, Chris Bernstein, and J. Paul MacDonald take pictures which set us apart.

Many of you like their photos so much that you've ordered reprints time and time again.

But the number of requests for reprints has overwhelmed the system we set up. Now we're trying something new to streamline and speed up the process — so that you won't have to wait so long to receive your prints.

Effective immediately, if you would like to purchase a glossy reprint of a photograph which has appeared in the Cohasset Mariner, please drop a note to the photographer (named in the photo caption) in care of The Mariner Newspapers, 165 Enterprise Dr., Marshfield, MA 02050.

The note should include the name of the newspaper in which the photograph appeared, the page number, and a brief description of the picture.

For example you could write:

"I would like a glossy reprint of the Alan Chapman photograph of the boy at bat on page 13 of the Aug. 18 issue of the Cohasset Mariner".

Be sure to include your name and a phone number and a time when you can be reached.

Please do not send any checks, cash or money orders until the photographer contacts you to make arrangements.

Our photographers like selling reprints, so don't be shy. It's a great way for them to make some extra money and the fact you like their work makes them feel good.

As the summer winds down and with school days on the horizon, your requests for photo coverage skyrocket. We have to share our photographers with other Mariner towns so advance scheduling is critical.

If you would like a Mariner photographer to cover your event, please give us as much notice as possible. Don't hesitate to call Community Editor Mary Ford at the Cohasset Mariner's Hingham office at 749-0031 with questions and photo requests.

Helpful booklet stolen

To the Editor:

Last Saturday (Aug. 20), I visited your recycling center with my host and saw a charming booklet entitled House and Gardens Guide to Cohasset Dump Decor — Sun'n and Dump Filled Views.

It showed colorful photos of items that one Cohasset resident had found in the boutique at your recycling center. While I was there a lot of people were enjoying the booklet which was witty and fun.

As an Australian I was impressed that someone would go to the trouble of touting the great resource that your town recycling center is. I am only sorry to hear that the booklet which was wired and said Don't Remove had been cut down and stolen, because it was clearly giving people considerable enjoyment.

Fairness is needed

To the Editor:

The insurance commissioner of Massachusetts regulates that Blue Cross, a non-profit organization, pay 92 cents of every dollar of premiums collected to pay claims, and that commercial insurance companies have to pay only 65 cents.

To me this means Blue Cross, being non-profit, uses the remaining eight cents to pay their overhead and fund a reserve fund.

The commercial companies should be able to hold their overhead the same as Blue Cross. Does this mean that the difference between 65 cents plus eight cents or 23 cents goes to their profit?

Cohasseter named to Cancer Society board

Officers and directors of the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society have been named to head up the 1994-5 activities of the Unit which serves nine South Shore communities through a volunteer program of information, education and service in the fight against cancer.

Communities served by the Unit are Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

Mark Kowalski of East Weymouth will serve the Unit as President beginning Sept. 1. Also appointed were Denise Valentine of Marshfield, vice president; Dr. Theresa Mulvey of Quincy, medical vice president and Eileen Cooney of Quincy, secretary.

Those named to the Board of Directors who live or work in the area are: Abington, Donna Nealon; Braintree, Rossella DiPietro, John Reed, Norman and Ruth Wilson; Brockton, Theresa Malkos, Martin Paul; Canton, Lauralee Wallace; Cohasset, Alfred Odermatt; Hanover, Elizabeth Antonellis, Diane Smoger; Milton, Felice Regan, Katherine Zalis; Quincy, Father Bill McCarthy, Carol and Joseph Rizzo, Barbara Sullivan, Pauline Sweeney; South Weymouth, George Baker; and Weymouth, Linda Sternfelt.

At the recent annual meeting of the Unit, committee chairs reported on the extensive amount of service provided to the public and to cancer patients and their families by volunteers of the Unit this past year. These have included free mammography clinics, professional education seminars, public education programs in local schools, and free transportation and financial assistance to cancer patients needing home care or transportation to hospitals for treatment.

In such popular fund-raising events as Daffodil Days, poinsettia sales, Jail & Bail, and Making Strides the unit raised over $250,000 during the year to fund the Society's programs.

Mark Kowalski, incoming Unit president, announced that the American Cancer Society's focus for the coming year will be on breast cancer awareness and early detection among older women, as well as the continuing tobacco control and anti-smoking efforts in which it has been a leader in Massachusetts. The annual Great American Smokeout is set for Thursday, Nov. 17, when smokers will be encouraged to quit for 24 hours.

The American Cancer Society funds more cancer research than any other organization except the U.S. government. The Society helped reduce the death rate from uterine cancer by more than 70 percent by leading the fight to include the Pap smear in every woman's medical checkup, and research brought the survival rate for acute lymphocytic leukemia up from 4 percent in 1960 to 72 percent today.

GOP to gather Sept. 18

South Shore Republicans and Independents will gather for the annual Cohasset GOP Cook-out at the oceanfront home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, Sunday, Sept. 18, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. Open to the public, all South Shore residents are invited to attend but reservations must be made in advance by calling Jean Muir, 383-1850 or Polly Logan, 383-0031.

Donation is $10 per person and limited tickets at the door will be $15. All state, congressional, county and General Court candidates will be invited to attend and to speak, Chairman Guild noted.

Cook-out Treasurer will be Douglas Peck, and reservations may be mailed to his attention at 63 Windy Hill Road, Cohasset 02025.

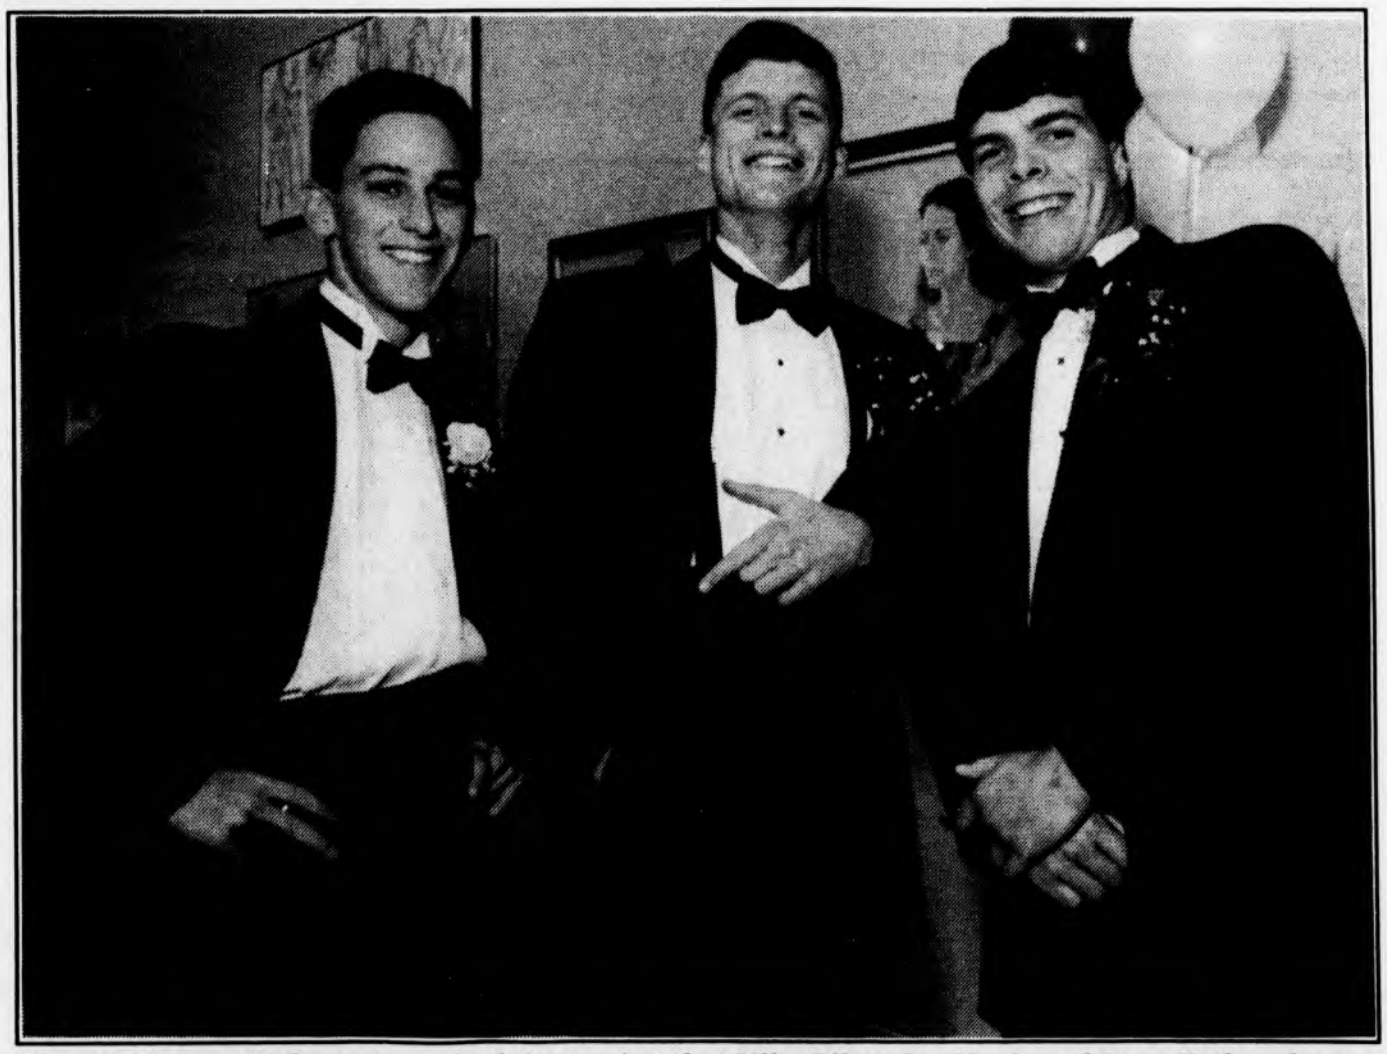
Bereavement support group to meet

The Hingham Visiting Nurse is sponsoring a seven-week bereavement support group from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Thursdays, beginning September 8 at the Hingham Visiting Nurse office, 10 Downer Ave., Hingham.

The group is open to all those who have suffered the death of a family member or friend within the past year. Grace Lettis, LICSW, staff social worker and coordinator of bereavement services will facilitate the meetings.

There is no charge for the series but pre-registration is required as space is limited. For information and registration call 749-1160.



It seems like yesterday not way back last spring that Mike Riley, Joe Menis and Dave Nothnagle were all dressed up for the Cohasset High School prom. Now summer is nearly over and school is ready to start again. Stay tuned to the Cohasset Mariner for lots of school news and photographs this fall.

Cohasset goes back to school Sept. 8

the state's Education Reform Act, is entering its second year.

Hart said he is pleased with the progress of the councils.

"It's healthy to have a wide variety of people getting involved and working together on the schools," Hart said, adding "it brings together new and different ideas from members of the community, parents, teachers and administrators."

And while the school councils are still relatively new, Hart said they will be even more effective in their second year.

School Committee member Ralph Kidder is equally enthusiastic about the school councils. Kidder called the councils "a great addition" to the schools, allowing parents to become intimately involved at the building level and bring new ideas to the system.

Another exciting aspect to this school year, said Kidder is the implementation of a town survey, due out this fall, which will help establish Cohasset's next five-year plan for excellence.

From the survey, Kidder said: "we'll get some good feedback from the community on what they value, what they're interested in, and where they want the schools to go in the next five years."

With the additional students this year comes additional staff, including 10 new teachers at both the primary and secondary levels, and a new director of elementary curriculum, Hart said.

At Deer Hill, Principal Kenneth Ekberg said he's looking forward to the new year, in which a language arts reading review and technological growth are in the spot light.

'We'll get some good feedback from the community on what they value, what they're interested in, and where they want the schools to go in the next five years.'

— Ralph Kidder on the school survey

Over at the High School, Principal Mary Ellen Gallagher said that with physicals complete the sports teams are in double practice sessions and many students have already been in to check out their schedules.

Gallagher said the trend is to take six and even seven courses, "they (students) want to be booked."

The return of a rotating schedule and the extension from a seven to an eight-period day are the big changes for the 1994-95 season. By starting the day 10 minutes early and by shortening periods from 45 to 41 minutes each, Cohasset High School is able to add another period and get the most learning out of each day.

The experimentation with new scheduling will allow more creative uses of blocks of time, like double and triple period classes that meet fewer times each week but for a longer time when they do, Gallagher said.

Yet another benefit to the eight-period day allows the addition of 13 lab periods for science and math courses. And while a period has been added, high school students will still be released at 2 p.m. The day starts at the high school at 7:32 a.m., at Deer Hill at 8:25 and ends at 2:25, at Osgood at 8:55 and ends at 2:55. With the exception of afternoon kindergarten classes, all students start school on Thursday, Sept. 8. Afternoon kindergartners begin on Friday, Sept. 9, and both kindergarten sections report on Monday, Sept. 12.

School lunch prices for 1994-95 are $1.40 at Osgood and $1.60 at Deer Hill and at the high School. Here's what's on the menu for the first couple of days back:

Thursday, September 8 - Grilled cheeseburger on roll or chicken nuggets, sliced vegetables with dip, pretzel, apple and milk.

Friday, September 9 - Grilled hot dog on roll or tuna salad croissant, sliced cucumbers, french fries, Jello with topping and milk.

Bon appetite and welcome back!

Parking gets the nod

Jack Hubbard, coordinator of the 7th annual Minot's Light Roundabout, a 5. 5-mile rowing race Sept. 10 in Cohasset Harbor, obtained permission for racers and guests to park at the sailing club on Government Island and Hagerty Property off Parker Ave.

There a wedding scheduled that afternoon at the Lightkeeper's residence on Government Island. Those guests will probably fill the Ed Young parking lot, Hubbard said.

If there is a severe Northeaster that day, Hubbard said the race would be held in Little Harbor.

"In the past rowers have parked at Sandy Beach, therefore I am asking for special permission to use the Sandy Beach Parking Lot if necessary," Hubbard asked.

Selectmen approved the requests Monday.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher is resuming her lesson schedule at her Beach Street home.

Daniels is a magna cum laude graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston. She is a member and past president of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority and Pi Kappa Lambda an honorary professional society.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony and rhythm study while encouraging students to compose and improvise. Through the medium of piano, she strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts.

Ballet group performs

St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, announces its sponsorship of the upcoming visit of the professional ballet troupe — Ballet Magnificat — Friday, Sept. 16, 8 p.m. at the Cohasset High School auditorium.

Ballet Magnificat is considered the premiere Christian ballet company in the world. The company of classically-trained professional dancers is dedicated to restoring the arts to the church and the world to the glory of God. Ballet Magnificat was founded in 1986 by artistic director Kathy Tribodeaux, silver medalist of the II USA International Ballet Competition. Since that time, the company has grown to include dancers, staff, choreography, and an ever-expanding repertoire.

The tour company performs nearly 100 times a year all across the U.S. and Canada. Invitations have been received from all over the world for the tour company to travel as missionaries.

Fairoaks Lane resident Susan Glancy DiPesa, president of her SOMWBA-certified heavy equipment rental firm, The Gabrielle Co., based in Cohasset, will assume the presidency of the Boston chapter of the National Association of Women in Construction this fall. Founded in 1987, The Gabrielle Co. is active on Deer Island with contracts for Perini Eastern Joint Venture, Boston Sand & Gravel and the George Hyman Construction Company. Prior to starting her company, DiPesa worked in her family's rigging firm, W.H. Glancy & Sons, founded in 1915.

A NAWIC member since 1982, DiPesa has just concluded the year as president-elect and has held the office of vice president, served on the board of directors and co-chaired the Women Business Enterprise Committee. She also served this year on the board that helped revise the State Office of Minority and Women Business Assistance regulations.

Cohasset Savings Bank has approved an agreement for the bank to be acquired by Shawmut National Corporation and is awaiting regulatory approval. The acquisition is to be accomplished by purchase of Cohasset stock for $16 per share.

The bank reported a net income of $76,000 for the second quarter ending June 30.

Judy A. Tedeschi of Cohasset has joined Pilgrim Health Care as advertising program administrator in the advertising and public relations department. This is a newly created position reflecting the company's continued growth.

Prior to joining Pilgrim, Tedeschi was employed at Lehman Millet Advertising Inc. as a senior account manager and before that, she was marketing manager at Wellesley Medical Management, the HealthStop parent company. She worked as a market research coordinator at Pilgrim from 1989 through 1990.

She earned her masters degree in business administration from Boston University and a bachelor of science degree from Middlebury College in Vermont.

She is an active member of the Ad Club in Boston.

Walter H. Johnson, Ph.D. of Cohasset was elected to the Board of Trustees of the South Shore Charter School Inc. Dr. Johnson is Chairman of the Physics and Engineering Department of Suffolk University.

For the past two years he has been assisting in the development and piloting of the environmental series of projects being adapted for the Charter School. He has also linked the new public school with schools in Russia, Wales, France and Spain.

For this next school year, he has begun to schedule international guests with experience in the project areas to be studied. The first group of guests will be from Russia and will be hosted at the first inter-generational seminar at the school to be held in September. The seminars will be pot luck dinners open to interested residents of the South Shore.

The trustees are responsible to the Massachusetts Secretary of Education for the development of this public prototype school. They hold overall authority for the policies, programs and budget of the school and contract with the school's private management company. The South Shore Charter School Inc. was designated to develop the Charter School by Secretary Piedad Robertson in March of this year.

John Larkin Thompson of Scituate, formerly of Cohasset, has been elected chairman of the board of directors of Center House Inc., one of the oldest and largest non-profit mental health rehabilitation agencies in New England.

Thompson, former president and chief executive officer of blue Cross and blue shield of Massachusetts, is currently of counsel with the law firm of Nutter, McClennen & Fish.

He has served on the executive advisory board of Center House since 1989 and was instrumental in the success of the agency's capital campaign to raise funds for its Bowker Street location in Boston.

Thompson is involved with several other organizations, including the New England Aquarium, EG&G Inc. and American Medical Response Inc.

In addition, he is a trustee of the Boston Plan for Excellence and of Emmanuel College and a director and member of the Executive Committee of Challenge to Leadership.

He holds degrees from Boston University School of Law, Columbia University Graduate School of Business and Villanova University. He holds an honorary L.L. D. from Emmanuel College.

Center House served 1,000 adults with mental and emotional disabilities from 42 communities in Greater Boston in 1993.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

PAYMENT PENALTIES

QUESTION: Is it standard for banks to charge a penalty fee if you pay off a home loan before its designated length?
ANSWER: Normally, yes! Paying off a mortgage in advance of its original loan length is known as "pre-payment." Many lenders today require a prepayment penalty if a mortgage is paid off before its original due date. If you do pay this penalty, remember that the IRS treats it the same as interest which means it can be used as a deducation.

In many states, consumer-oriented laws have been passed which prohibit any prepayment penalties after the loan has been in effect from three to five years.

Adams Cup's final race loses its wind

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

There was a serene calmness surrounding Cohasset Harbor on Wednesday morning that would be perfect for a visiting tourist taking a leisurely stroll along the scenic oceanside area.

But for those who compete on the open seas, the windless morning was nothing more than a nuisance.

With just one race remaining in the Adams Cup National Women's Sailing Championship, a lack of wind had delayed the expected 9:15 a.m. start with Becky Wilson of the IDA Lewis (Rhode Island) Yacht Club holding a 6-3/4 point lead over the Austin (Texas) Yacht Club's Linda McDavitt, 25-1/4 to 32. Lauren Abramson (Glenmar Sailing Association, Maryland) was in the third spot with 34-1/2 points and Carol Conners (Mystic River Mudhead Sailing Association, Connecticut) followed with 38-3/4 points.

It was Conners who held a narrow, one-point edge over Wilson, 18-3/4 to 19-3/4, through the first six races.

Sailors faced the full gamut of weather conditions during the first three days of the event, particularly on Tuesday when a pelting rain in the morning led to clear skies and a strong wind for the afternoon races.

The 10-boat field wasn't expected to get much of a break in the weather on Wednesday. The forecast called for overcast and windy conditions, making for choppy waters off the coast of Cohasset and Hull where the race course follows.

But the winds were nowhere to be found.

Winsor Murray, whose wife, Betts, is the chairman of the race committee, said there would be a major effort to get the final race in on Wednesday.

He said the sailors were willing to wait all day for the wind to pick up to the point where it would be possible to hold a competitive race. "I think it would be late in the day," Murray said. "About three or four."

1994 marks the seventh time in 70 years the Cohasset Yacht Club has hosted the event. The championship includes 10 of the best crews in the country, racing International 210 sail boats. The courses range from 3-8 miles and follow both triangular and out-and-back routes.

Conners and Wilson each captured individual victories with Wilson taking race No. 4 and Conners winning the very next race as the International 210 sail

The fall high school sports is about to begin so it's time to break out a few sports cliches for those coaches and players who need something to talk about with the press.

Here's ten cliches that I always enjoy hearing. A brief analysis follows each gem.

1-"We're taking things one day at a time." (The player or coach forgot who they play next week.)

2- "I don't know what will happen 'till we get out on the field and play." (Several players are awaiting report cards or parole hearings.)

3- "It's a new season and everyone starts at 0-0." (The team lost every game last year but nobody really remembers that.)

4- "A coach is only as good as his players." (The team is full of chess club rejects.)

5- "You practice like you play." (The star player missed today's practice to pick out a new convertible from a corrupt college booster.)

6- "It's a shame that someone had to lose." (If the game went on any longer, the coach would have needed a rubber room.)

7- "There's no substitute for hard work." (The coach just found out a seven-foot center moved to town.)

8- "We needed to play a perfect game to win and we didn't." (We tried to take out their best player with an illegal take-down but we missed.)

9- "You can't win any games if you don't score." (We couldn't score even if our opponents all fell down at the same time.)

10- "They won the game, but we were the better team." (The player who screwed up on the losing goal will be running laps until his hamstrings pop.)

What is happening in golf?

It used to be considered a gentlemen's game of sportsmanship and respect. Now it resembles a frat house food fight.

For example, John Daly, a former PGA champion, got into a brawl with a 62-year-old guy in the parking lot after a golf tourney on the weekend.

Apparently, Daly fired several monster tee shots towards the group ahead of him on the course. The old man was the father of one of the players and told Daly to grow up afterwards.

Words were passed and the brawl began. Does anyone look good getting into a fight with a 62-year-old guy? Daly, who is an admitted alcoholic and the PGA's bad boy, could be looking at a serious suspension from the tour.

And earlier this month, the great Jack Nicklaus, the winner of the most major tournaments in history, said blacks can't play the sport as well as whites because they have "different muscles."

Huh?

Apparently Jack's been inhaling too much lawn fertilizer or hanging out with Jimmy the Greek at the clubhouse.

On Sunday, Tiger Woods, an 18-year-old black golfer, became the youngest

Celebrity All-Star hockey game draws huge turnout

By David McKee
Mariner staff

The First Annual C. Fred Fawcett Memorial Hockey Tournament was a smashing success as hundreds of fans turned out to watch NHL hockey stars and "Full House" TV star Dave Coulier lace up their skates for a good cause.

The tourney was held at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. Proceeds from the tourney went to the Fawcett Memorial Scholarship at Hingham High.

Fawcett, 39, passed away on Nov. 18. He was a former standout defenseman at Hingham High, class of '72 and also played varsity hockey at the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in '77.

On the day Fawcett was buried, his family talked about doing something to honor Fred's memory.

"We wanted to do something around hockey," his older brother Don Fawcett said. "So the idea of a game like this came up. This game will raise money for the scholarship, but more importantly, it will give all Fred's friends a chance to get together and remember him and all the good times he had on the ice."

Dave Coulier took a red-eye flight from filming his TV series to make the tourney on Saturday morning.

He was the hit of the day as fans cheered his every move and waited up to an hour to get his autograph after the game.

Coulier proved to be a solid hockey player and an affable fellow as he posed for numerous photos and signed hockey sticks, shirts and photos in the lobby of the rink after the final buzzer.

Two of the other big stars at the tourney were Bruins assistant GM Mike O'Connell, who is from Cohasset and former Canadien Chris Nilan, who makes him home in Hingham.

"I grew up with Fred and played hockey with him and I was very honored to be part of this," O'Connell said. "I got the call about the tourney and agreed right away. Hockey was such a big part of his life and I'm glad everyone was able to get out there and have a good time."

O'Connell hadn't laced up the blades for awhile.

"I haven't played since around Christmas," he said. "I'm going to feel this tomorrow."

As for Nilan, he was at the Pilgrim Rink when Fawcett collapsed with a heart attack in November.

"It was a terrible thing," he said. "I was in the other rink when it happened and it really shook up a lot of people. But I was very pleased to be a part of this. Freddy was a great guy and I'll do anything to keep his memory alive."

As for the hockey, Nilan gave it a thumbs up.

"There was some very good hockey out there," he said. "It was fun and everyone had a great time."

Former Canadien and Weymouth native Bobby Sheehan scored a big goal for the celebrity team in the final seconds of the last game to give his team a 4-3 victory.

Some of the other stars at the tourney included: Tony Amonte, of the Chicago Blackhawks, Marty McInnis of the New York Islanders, Tim Sweeney of the Anaheim Mighty Ducks, Kurt Walker of the Toronto Maple Leafs, Bill O'Dwyer of the Bruins, Steve Baker of the New York Rangers, Steve Rooney of the New Jersey Devils, Scott Harlow of the Canadiens, Tom Songin of the Bruins, Mike Breen of the Buffalo Sabres, Bobby Miller of the Bruins, Fred Ahearn of the Colorado Rockies, Mark Heaslip of the Rangers and Dave Silk of the Bruins.

Other teams in the tourney included: a UPenn alumni team, a Hingham team and several adult hockey teams.

Don Fawcett, 53, Fred's older brother also played in the tourney.

Many members of the Fawcett family attended the game. In addition to Don Fawcett, Fred's sister Leslie, as well as his wife Pat and his three children Frederick, Courtney and Wesley were there.

Don Fawcett credited Kevin Malloy, Hoby Taylor and Kurt Walker with getting the game organized.

Adams Cup's final race

boats ripped through the waters off Cohasset Harbor.

McDavitt won races 2 and 3 while Abramson took the first and sixth races but didn't fare nearly as well in the four others.

Abramson couldn't narrow the gap on the two leaders as she crossed the line in fourth-, fifth-, seventh- and eighth-place. She trailed Conners and Wilson in third.

Conners and Wilson were easily the two most consistent racers two-thirds of the way through the competition. Conners garnered four top-three finishes, a fourth and seventh. Wilson had two second-place showings to go along with her one victory. She placed fourth, fifth and sixth in the three other races.

Cohasset is home of one of the most colorful figures in the event's history, four-time winner Frances (McElwain) Wakeman. Only Lorna Wittelsey has captured the cup more times with her five victories in 1927, '28, '30, '31 and '34. Wakeman, though, is the only sailor to win the event four years in a row (1935-38).

Wakeman is now one of the trustees for the event and her son, Sam Wakeman, is the event chairman.

Murray said the competition has "gone very smoothly and very professionally," since the opening day of racing on Sunday.

"Cohasset should be proud of what it has done for these crews from around the nation," he said.

Hopefully, Woods will go on to surpass all of Nicklaus' records. That would be nice. Maybe Nicklaus should stick to talking about things he knows, like pulling a golf shoe out of his mouth.

Say good night Jack.

Apologies go out to Hanover's New England Health and Racquet for incorrectly identifying the popular club in the recent article on the local National Hockey League players who work out there during the summer months. I'd also like to thank Jane Spitz for her efforts in helping set up the interviews with Tony and Kelly Amonte, Tim Sweeney, Andy Brickley and their conditioning coach, Ed Connors.

It's amazing just how far the Middleboro All-Stars advanced this season in qualifying for the Little League World Series in Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

Just consider the number of All-Star teams in this region alone and multiply it a thousand-fold to cover the squads across the country. Middleboro ended up as one of the top-four teams in the United States.

The story itself is filled with so many worn out cliches, that when they're applied to reality, as in this case, they bring a bigger meaning with them; the quiet, unassuming New England town. A team playing towns bigger than them and coming out on top. Good hitting, fielding and come-from-behind victories, sprinkled with a little luck.

Middleboro's performance should also serve as a huge motivation for the other local towns who are loaded with young, baseball talent. The team showed no goal is too big if its players are willing give that something extra that separates the good from the great teams.

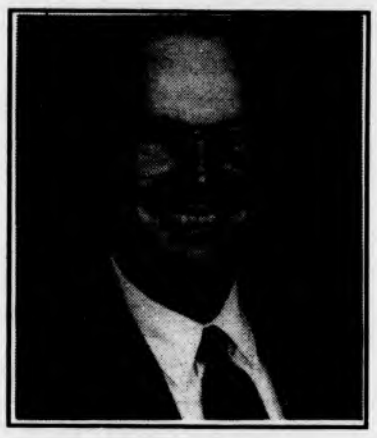
ROGER TWYMAN



Gail Petersen Bell, CRB, President, Home Center Real Estate, is pleased to announce the appointment of Roger Twyman of Scituate as Sales Manager for the Company.

"Roger's experience in real estate sales, his significant contributions to the REALTOR organizations in Plymouth County and with the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, and his many years of Personnel and Training management experience are a valuable addition to our commitment to providing the best professional service possible to our growing list of clients on the South Shore. Because of the continued strength of the real estate market on the South Shore and the company's success in recent years this is an opportune time to invest in our future by adding another highly respected professional to our management team," said Ms. Bell.

Roger is the 1994 recipient of the coveted Realtor Outstanding Service Award, an award which recognizes the contributions made to the Realtor community. President of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors and a member of the Plymouth County and Massachusetts Association of Realtors Boards of Directors, Roger also serves as a member of the Personnel and Finance Committees of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors. A volunteer driver for Scituate's Meals on Wheels program, Roger has served on many Town boards, most recently as Vice Chairman of the Scituate Council on Aging.

Mr. Twyman is a Boston College graduate and has served on the Advisory Committee of the Suffolk University Department of Public Administration.

Sharks have openings

The Bay State Sharks Squirt Major hockey team, Metropolitan Boston Hockey League's defending champs, has openings for forwards, defensemen and goaltenders for the upcoming season. Players must have been born in 1984.

The Sharks offer the following:

- 39 games against some of the best competition in the state
- weekly power skating sessions, conducted by Igor Gratcher, formerly of the Russian Red Army Hockey Team
- two practices per week
- three-day pre-season clinic Aug. 29-31
- two tournaments

For more information call Greg Coady at 617/826-2993 or Bob Hatch at 617/982-0276.

1994 fall recreation soccer

The Cohasset Recreation Department fall soccer registrations will be held for boys and girls in grades kindergarten through six at town hall, Saturday, Sept. 10, from 9 to 11 a.m. The fee for the program is $15, not including an optional $5 T-shirt charge. Checks for the program fee should be made payable to "Town of Cohasset."

The fall recreation soccer program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Soccer Club and the recreation department.

Registrations will also be taken for fifth/sixth- and seventh/eighth-grade travel teams which will play Sunday afternoons.

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

Summertime brings artist Ros Farbush's South Shore Art Center students to the yard and gardens of our Grand Tour columnist, Ginger Ferenz. Here budding artists under Ros' careful eye create beautiful paintings of Ginger's perennial gardens.

Train may be hot topic at selectmen's meeting

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Selectman Peter Pratt, who is opposed to restoration of the Greenbush line, has sponsored an appearance by members of the anti-Greenbush group Coastal Coalition to appear at the selectmen's meeting at 8:45 p.m. Monday (Sept. 12).

Although Cohasset residents who are members of the citizens group talked with Pratt and arranged for the meeting, Coalition heads Nancy Buckley and Randy Young of Hingham also plan to attend, Buckley said Tuesday.

Admittedly a late comer in the high level of detail on the train issue, Pratt said "as it stands now I am not in favor of restoration of the Greenbush line because I don't believe the impacts of the train have been fully ventilated and alternatives fully looked at."

Pratt said he does not view the Coastal Coalition as a pro- or anti-train group, but as a "group of citizens who stepped up to the plate" to address the issues.

He said if Back-on-Track, the pro-train group, had contacted him as Coalition members did, he would have helped that group get on the agenda.

Reached by telephone Tuesday, William Grimes of Hingham, who is chairman of Back-on-Track, was aware of the meeting and planned to attend along with Cohasset residents who support rail restoration.

Grimes also sits on the Citizens Advisory Committee, a group appointed to comment on the recent MBTA environmental feasibility study on the Greenbush line. Cohasset residents on the CAC are Citizens' group cautious on dumping of landfill report

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

In the past SAFE — a grass-roots citizens' group opposed to the proposed expansion of Cohasset Heights Landfill off Rte. 3A — was heartened by rejection of the latest environmental feasibility study on the project.

But this time, members aren't euphoric, said SAFE president Linda Keller.

Keller alleges "legal intimidation" by proponents of the project has worked to a degree.

Keller explained that in the Aug. 31 certificate on the Supplemental Final Environmental Impact Report (SFEIR), Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe trimmed the scope of further studies — opting to have other outstanding issues addressed in the course of further review by local and state regulatory authorities.

In rejecting the SFEIR, Coxe said CHL failed to provide "information about contamination of ground and surface water and potential impacts on the Lily Pond drinking water supply."

Coxe also said that the proponent "continues to threaten legal challenge" to her jurisdiction to review issues raised relating the current CHL operations and compliance with applicable regulations and permit conditions.

Although SAFE is somewhat taken aback by the secretary's comments about some issues being re-

Teacher, principal bow out early

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Unlike larger towns in the area, Cohasset won't have to scramble to replace a dozen or more teachers and administrators leaving ahead of schedule through an early retirement incentive offered under the Education Reform Act.

In fact, Supt. Stephen Hart said Tuesday that the school department has already moved to cover the vacancies left by Deer Hill Principal Kenneth Ekberg and social studies teacher Edward MacDermott whose applications were the only ones from Cohasset accepted last week by the state teachers retirement board. Seven from town applied for the incentive program.

Guido Risi, a retired principal of Hatherly School in Scituate who works part-time in the schools' business office, will step in on an interim basis at Deer Hill. The school department will form a sub-committee to interview candidates for the principal's position which will pay in $50,000 range, Hart said. Candidates must hold a masters' degree and have some administrative

Interviewers are sought

The Cohasset school system is forming a screening committee to interview candidates for the position of elementary principal. Anyone interested in serving on this committee should call Stephen E. Hart, Superintendent of Schools, at 383-6111.

Safe Homes conference

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee will host a regional "Safe Homes" conference Weds., Sept. 21, at 7:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Lightkeepers House on Cohasset Harbor. Representatives from surrounding towns are invited.

The conference objective is to share ideas in an effort to strengthen each community's program.

For more information call Ted Carroll at 383-9900.

Use of town land okay'ed

Selectmen will let St. Stephen's Church use the town property on the side of the church facing the Common where the war memorial is at the base of the hill from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sept. 17. The hours include time to set up and clean up.

New staffers on board

Eighteen new staff members have been hired by the Cohasset schools, the largest number since 1979, according to Supt. Stephen Hart.

Among the newcomers are three former Cohasset school students. Torin Sweeney will be teaching physical education at the Deer Hill School; Christine Marsh, a kindergarten aide; and Margot Nedrow, a special needs teacher at Cohasset High School.

Enrollment is up

School committee member Ralph Kidder said a statistic in the "South Weekly" section of the Boston Sunday Globe on August 28 contained a typographical error that will mislead readers into thinking that Cohasset school enrollment has decreased. The actual enrollment in the school system is 1,193, but was printed as 1,093.

No exceptions made for kindergarten admission

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner staff

The first day of kindergarten will have to wait another year for one Cohasset girl who turned five years old on Tuesday—five days too late.

The school committee refused to make an exception for Tom and Alison Callahan's daughter, to allow her to enter kindergarten this week.

Cohasset school department policy states that children entering kindergarten must be five years old on or before September 1 of that year.

"I'm concerned with holding her back. She's not a 'gifted' child, but she's ready to start school," Alison Callahan told the school committee Tuesday evening.

Her daughter's pre-school teachers, pediatrician, and a family friend who is an educational professional, "feel she should start now," Callahan said. "We're concerned that she's not going to get the challenges she needs."

While she understands that whatever date is set, there will be children whose birthdays fall just beyond the cut-off date, Callahan said she is "frustrated" that there is no flexibility or policy regarding testing in these cases.

"What do we do with this child?" she asked the school committee.

Chairman Nancy Sandell assured the Callahans that the school staff is "sensitive to meeting the needs of all children."

School committee member Ralph Kidder said that when the policy was established, no provisions were made for exceptions or special readiness testing for children whose parents feel should be enrolled before their fifth birthdays.

"We were concerned with the number of children being held back," he explained to the Callahans, "with all the stigma of what that entails."

In years past, allowing exceptions resulted in an age span of as much as 22 months between the youngest and oldest children in a kindergarten class, he said.

Osgood School Principal Linda Whitney said the policy change to the September 1 cut-off date was in response to studies that show children who start school before age 5 have a greater likelihood of being retained, which she said is a "bigger problem" than waiting the extra year. She noted that many children in the class will in fact be approaching their sixth birthdays.

"We will meet your child's needs whenever she's enrolled," Whitney said.

Supt. Stephen Hart suggested that in some ways, the year's delay helps the children in social development, in later years.

With no provisions for exceptions, Callahan said the policy "caters to the lowest common denominator."

Sandell asked for a motion to allow this exception to the department policy. Kidder made the motion, but it was not seconded.

The Callahans said their daughter will continue with her pre-school program.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby, Deborah Cook, and Edward Fegreus. After 18 months of study, the committee which represents all towns in the Greenbush corridor, endorsed Greenbush restoration and supported a short tunnel under Hingham Square.

Pratt anticipated that both sides would have a chance to speak at Monday's meeting.

He said in his view the public doesn't have all the facts and thinks the Coastal Coalition has the answers.

"I can't get anyone to say where we are in the process. I'm sure state officials know but I don't get the sense the public knows," Pratt said.

"My central goal in assisting them (Coalition) to get on the agenda is to find out where we stand now in the official process."

solved at the permitting stage — the group remains determined to keep the expansion from moving forward.

"We're definitely plunging full-speed ahead," said Keller, adding SAFE, which stands for Stop Any Further Expansion, plans to meet at 8 p.m., Sept. 14 at the Unitarian Parish House on North Main St. to discuss its next step.

CHL owner Paul Barry declined to comment on the report.

Attorney Anton Moehrke, a landfill specialist who represents CHL, said he was analyzing Coxe's decision and that Barry had reached no decision on what his next step would be.

Coxe said CHL must address the issue of contamination of groundwater in its next report.

She noted that recent monitoring data indicating increased levels of contaminants in surface and groundwater samples taken at the site boundary were not included in the SFEIR even though the data appeared to be available prior to the report's completion.

"The extent of contamination currently present in ground and/or surface waters and the direction and rate of migration of the contamination plume must be determined.

"I remain convinced that the proponent's approach to resolving current noncompliance and contamination issues is directly relevant to future operations," she wrote.

The filing of environmental impact report(s) is a state requirement for large projects and can take years.

Coxe essentially told CHL to redo the draft environmental impact reports it filed in 1991 and 1992. CHL's Second Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Report was accepted by the Coxe in March of 1993 as properly complying with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act — setting the stage for CHL to submit the final report.

Coxe rejected CHL's Final Environmental Impact Report last February and rejected the SFEIR last week.

Moehrke said he knew of no limit to the number of environmental impact reports that could be filed.

experience.

Hart explained senior teachers and administrators could apply for the buy-out program which allowed five years to be added to service or age to determine retirement benefits.

The state appropriated $20 million this year to share the cost of the early retirements with cities and towns. Cohasset town meeting voted to participate in the program last spring.

Although the town could realize a financial benefit the first year or so as top-of-the-scale people are replaced with those at lower pay steps — over the long term any savings can't be clearly determined now, Hart said. The town must split the additional cost of the early retirement benefit with the state — and over time, the new hire moves up the pay-step ladder, he explained.

"In the long run, it has a positive affect," Hart said. "The people who applied are anxious to retire.

"That does not mean they aren't doing a good job in the classroom," he stressed.

John Leary, director of pupil services, has also retired but through the regular program, Hart said. Alicia Shea, a Walpole resident, has been hired to replace Leary.

A long-term substitute teacher has taken over MacDermott's classes for the year and the school department will advertise for a permanent replacement in the spring, Hart said.

This is the second and final year, the early retirement incentive was offered under the Education Reform Act, which passed last year. Cohasset teachers were unable to participate in the program last year because town meeting, which had to approve the buy-out option, could not act in time.

'Ballet Magnificat' — a supernatural experience

By Mary Grayken
Special to the Mariner

Even when you ask staunch churchgoers in New England how they feel about liturgical dance, the response is likely to be, well, what is it? However, liturgical dance, performed as a means of public worship, dates back to the days of the Old Testament and has recently resurfaced as a veritable form of worship in Christian churches.

Kathy Thibodeaux, founder of "Ballet Magnificat," a full-time professional Christian ballet company, says liturgical dance "uses the technique of classical ballet to demonstrate gospel stories." She says that one of the purposes of liturgical dance is to enable congregations to explore the role that movement and action can play in faith development.

Historically, she points out that the Old Testament relates that David, King of Israel in 1000 B.C., directed his people to praise the Lord with dance in Psalms 149 and 150. Miriam led the women of Israel in dance when the Red Sea was parted and the Israelites were freed from Egyptian bondage, and David danced before God when he led the Ark of the Covenant, which contained the tablets of the Ten Commandments, into Jerusalem.

'Ballet Magnificat'. . .

"Ballet Magnificat," based in Jackson Mississippi, has been touring the United States and Canada since 1986. It will be making its first South Shore appearance when it stops next Friday in Cohasset, while it is on an East Coast tour. Lynne Phipps, a youth minister at St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset and a veteran dancer, says the church is sponsoring the ballet troupe when it comes here because "this is an opportunity for people to see a professional ballet company perform locally, and the Christian values of this group are appealing."

Ballet Magnificat
SCHOOL & STUDIOS
"Let them praise His name with dancing."
(Psalm 149:3)

All nine members of this dance company, including Thibodeaux, danced professionally before "Ballet Magnificat" was formed. Thibodeaux began dancing at the tender age of six and says that even then she dreamed of being a ballerina. In 1978, she became one of the first contracted dancers in the Jackson Ballet Company, (now Ballet Mississippi), and soon after this she became a principal dancer in the group.

In 1982, Thibodeaux entered the II USA International Ballet Competition, held in Jackson, Mississippi. There she danced solo, and for the first time performed publicly with the accompaniment of a contemporary Christian song entitled, "We Shall Behold Him." She received a silver medal for her performance and widespread national and international attention as well.

Feeling the desire to move in a different direction, Thibodeaux resigned from the Jackson Ballet Company in 1986, announcing an intention to form a professional Christian ballet company. "I didn't know how it would be done. I hadn't heard of any other Christian ballet companies, but I believed God was calling me to do this," she said.

"Ballet Magnificat" presents 100 programs a year. This means that its members travel two to three weeks out of every month. Four of the members of the troupe are married. Two of the married members bring spouses with them on tour. Three of the couples who are married are parents. "We home school them," says Thibodeaux when asked about how the children are educated away from home. The couples with children use a Christian home school curriculum for teaching when they are on the road.

"When people come to see us (dancing), they often change their minds," Thibodeaux says of some of the people with whom she has spoken after performances. She says there are people who are skeptical about the nature of liturgical dance. Watching this company enables them to see dancing as "a viable artistic witness to the presence of God in the world."

"Ballet Magnificat's" programs combine classical and modern ballet and are aimed at witness, worship, and praise. Music the group uses includes selections by Steve Green, John Michael Talbot, Phil Driscoll, Kemper Crabb, Steve Fry, Sandi Patti and Michael Card. The company dances for church services, special church events, and outreach and community organizations.

"Ballet Magnificat" will perform at Cohasset High School Sept. 16 at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the office of Saint Stephen's Church in Cohasset. Call Lynne Phipps at 383-1083. Seating at the High School is limited, so it is advisable to order tickets early.

Auditions are slated

The Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell will hold auditions for "A Christmas Carol" beginning at 1 p.m. Sunday Sept. 11. Auditioners will be asked to come prepared to sing, dance and possibly read from the script. People of all ages who are strong choral singers are needed.

The performances of "A Christmas Carol" will run November 25 through December 11.

TIM GAGE
STATE SENATE

TIM GAGE says that the State Senator should not sell out to Senate President Bill Bulger and the Beacon Hill Lobbyist Gang.

TIM GAGE envisions a Senate where Senators are PUBLIC servants to the people and not PERSONAL servants to the Senate President.

That is why TIM GAGE will not vote for Bill Bulger as Senate President.

In the People's Senate
TIM GAGE will fight for:

- An Open Senate Process
- Real Welfare Reform
- Rate Relief for MWRA Rate Payers
- Restoration of the Greenbush Line
- Auto Insurance Rate Reduction

Vote TIM GAGE for State Senate in the September 20th Democratic Primary

A salute goes to John Nathan Maynard this week! John, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Maynard Jr. of Locust Rd., received a nomination to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., from Congressman Gerry Studds.

The next step was that he was accepted and offered an appointment, then he entered West Point June 27 (John was one of 1,160 students out of 13,600 who applied). Next he went through Cadet basic training and, Aug. 13, in full dress brigade parade, was accepted into the U.S. Corps of Cadets, going from New Cadet to Cadet Private. John started academic classes Aug. 15.

Wow, what a schedule! From all reports he is very happy there, hopefully he will fill us in as time goes on.

Recently Girl Scouts from Cohasset participated in the opening ceremony of the Paralyzed Veterans National Convention. This was held at the Westin Hotel in Boston Aug. 23.

Angela Paresi, Amy Paresi and Amelia Butman, along with Junior Troop 4773 girls, Deidre Bigley, Rachel McElroy, Nicole Plante and Katy Sullivan carried the flags for each chapter of the Paralyzed Veterans.

After the ceremony, Troop 4773 visited the JFK Library and the World War II exhibit. What a great group, we are proud of you and your efforts, there should be more volunteers like you!

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, the area's oldest community theatre group, will begin its 73rd season with the presentation of the heart-warming family play, "Little Women." Auditions will be held at the Cohassest town hall auditorium Sunday, Sept. 11, at 2 p.m., and Monday, Sept. 12, at 7 p.m.

The director, Amy Wilder, will be auditioning for four girls ages 12 to 17, a teenaged boy, two men and two women for the cast. The show will be produced Nov. 26 and 27, and Dec. 2,3,4,9,10, and 11. To borrow a script, or for further information, call Dawn Rota at 545-3195.

When Dana Doggett, son of Tom and Polly Doggett, was sent to far-off Taipai (Taiwan) on business recently, he only had a city map written in Chinese to show him the way. He became completely lost until he discovered a Mormon temple located around the corner from where he needed to go. From then on he could tell the taxi driver, "Mormon Temple, please!" The temple became a true "guiding light" to this native son who as a youth was baptized a Mormon here on the South Shore.

Don't forget that Sept. 13 is the day for you to circle on your calendar. From 2 to 7 p.m. the bloodmobile will be at the First Parish House, and your donation is really needed!

Let's give a loud Cohasset welcome to Jared McAuliffe, the brand new son of Bill and Carole McAuliffe, 9 Meade Ave in Hull.

Jared was born June 16, at 11 p.m., weighing in at 7 lbs. 8 ozs. at South Shore Hospital. His brothers, Joshua and Jacob, are thrilled to have a little brother of course, as are his grandparents, Barbara and Vestre Martin of South Yarmouth and Jeanne and Bill McAuliffe of Cohasset. To say nothing of great-grandmother Shirley Laidlaw!

Congratulations to all of you!

Washington State University has released its President's Honor Roll for the Summer 1994 term. To be eligible for the recognition, a student must have carried at least nine graded hours and earned a 3.75 grade point average during the term, or maintained a 3.5 cumulative grade point with at least 15 total hours of course work at WSU.

Stuart A.W. Tolman "made the grade," we send him our applause for all of his efforts!

Nicholas B. Terry, son of David and Suzanne Terry of 32 Margin St., Cohasset, is entering Bates College as a first-year student.

A graduate of Cohasset High School, Terry served as editor of the school newspaper. He was a staff writer for the school literary magazine, and was a member of the track team.

Jessica C. Pyfrom, daughter of Anthony and Joan Pyfrom of 84 Linden Dr., is entering Bates College as a first-year student. Jessica is also a graduate of Cohasset High School and was a member of the student council, the yearbook staff, the school newspaper staff, the chorus and the varsity soccer and tennis teams. She was involved in community service. Best of luck to both of you, study hard and have fun!

That's the news from here. Now that everyone is settling into the fall schedule, make sure that calling around town (me) is part of your routine!

High Noon

As schools open, Cohasset comes alive again.

Along with the increased activity that goes along with schools, youth sports, and clubs and organizations of all sorts there is an increased demand for space in the Cohasset Mariner.

We love all the attention and pledge to do our best to serve you.

Nothing succeeds in community journalism like being the primary source that townspeople turn to for local news and events.

So as things pick up, this is as good a time as any to remind your about deadlines and priorities.

The deadline for all editorial copy is noon Tuesday for the following Thursday's edition.

That means your news items must be dropped off at our drop spot at Hennessy's on Brook Street in Cohasset Village by noon Tuesday at the latest. Items may also be mailed to the Cohasset Mariner, PO Box 71, Cohasset 02025 or to our headquarters in Marshfield, 165 Enterprise Dr., 02050.

It's always better to try and get your copy in before the deadline. That gives us time to process it before the Tuesday rush.

Please remember that getting an item in early or by deadline is not a guarantee it will appear in that week's issue. Sometimes we have to hold something a week for space reasons.

Items that are date-specific usually take precedence over those that report on an event that has already taken place. Events and happenings that take place right here in Cohasset — as opposed to regional news — come first.

Whatever copy we receive is edited at our discretion. Sometimes items are cut from the bottom, so it's important to get the time, date, and place near the top of your news release. Unfortunately, when we are looking to fill a "hole" in the paper, we cannot always take the time to cut the item the way you might think best.

We also accept photographs and welcome those taken when our staff photographers are not available. The photographs you submit may be black & white or color. Please remember to identify people in the picture and write your name and address on the back if you want the photo(s) returned.

If you'd like a photographer to cover your event, please let give us as much notice as possible. Remember that we "share" our photographers with 15 other Mariner towns.

Do we make mistakes? Sure we do!

The Mariner is a team operation and copy we receive goes through several hands before it appears in the paper. We do our best not to "lose" anything or forget to include a timely item but mistakes do happen.

If you have a question about a news release or photographer, please calls at 749-0031 or 1-800-649-6661.

Greenbush will hurt town, reader says

letters

To the Editor:

I would like to express my concern about the MBTA putting back the train on the Greenbush Line. I have been reading the letters for and against. I would like to take another approach than the facts and figures that are sometimes hard to interpret because they can be very subjective and confusing when one side makes a claim and the other side denies it. Who do you believe?

I have lived in this town for most of my 36 years of life. The old train went out the year I was born. I've heard good and bad about the old system, but a diesel train is different than a steam train. It's louder, faster, harder to stop and more dangerous.

Let's look at the quality of life in this town the way it has been most of my life. It is a relatively safe, quiet, and clean place to live. It is a beautiful town and I chose to raise my children here because I feel very safe here. When my children go out to play, I don't worry. I've taught them the stranger thing. I've taught them how to safely cross the street and a ride a bicycle. It's not the city. If it were, I'd be worried all the time. So I choose to live here. If I want to live in the city, I'll move there when my children have grown.

Now let's look into the future to see how Cohasset may change as a result of the train. Will we be a safe? I don't think anyone is going to grab your pocketbook or VCR and jump on the train for their get-away. But think of all the times you and your children will be crossing the tracks. The law of averages and common sense say, someone will be hurt or killed, many over the years. We will be playing Russian Roulette. Think of where the crossings are in relation to your home and how many times you and your children will cross them to get to school, the store, to work, all the errands you do in a week. Remember the children who attend the rec. program who will cross to get to swimming lessons, the children who walk to school, or the ones who ride their bikes to sailing. I am concerned about the crossing at the base of Pond Street. A boy was killed there on a bike when I was a kid. A truck slammed into the house at the base of the hill a few years ago. The school buses and our teenagers will be driving that route to and from the high school in the winter. I think our safety will suffer greatly.

Will Cohasset be as quiet and how important is that? How well did you sleep the last time you spent a night in the city? I know I take our quiet little town for granted. Now imagine a warning bell going off every hour at every crossing down the line, especially Sohier St., Smith Place, Pleasant St., Spring St., and the base of Pond St., like a chorus. Then a big diesel powered train rushes by, roaring and clanging along the tracks. I've heard the trains in Florida and on the Cape. They're loud! You will hear it in Beechwood, on Atlantic Ave., and up Forest Ave. But what about the people near the tracks? They'll be holding their china on the shelves as their whole house shakes. The babies will wake from their naps just as they've finally dosed off. The grown-ups will have to suspend their conversations while the train passes or else yell. And I'll say a prayer for anyone who gets migraines. Good-bye quiet town.

This town wasn't always this clean and it still could be cleaner. I recall the litter in the early sixties blowing down the streets like confetti. I wouldn't swim in the harbor as a kid. People say the train will help the air pollution problem by cutting down the number of cars on the roads. That could be true if large numbers of people use the train. But the exhaust from the train will be going into Cohasset air and into our lungs, especially the people who live, work, and play in close proximity to the train. What about the Osgood School playground? Aren't people fighting to protect our water supply? Why condone something that we know will pollute Cohasset's air? We will smell and breathe the exhaust. We all know what diesel smells like. The people along the tracks will have soot. A black film will coat the inside and the outside of their precious homes. I don't think anyone should be forced to breathe bad air or have soot on their home.

Everyone agrees that property values along the tracks will go down. I never thought the train would come back. I could have bought property there if my life's path had led me there. I didn't. Some people have lived there for decades. I've heard values have already fallen. Is that tough luck? No, it's not fair. Anyone who says too bad for them, is not thinking of a community. We live in this town together. We are neighbors. I care about the people in my town. Perhaps all of the property values will drop some. I think the entire town will suffer together if the train comes through.

How many people will ride the train? Some of the town's people work right in Cohasset, some commute to other suburban towns, and some commute to Boston. How many of the people who commute, already take the boat most of the time? How many people want the train because they are hoping the expressway will clear up and ease their drive? I'm not going to throw around facts and figures here. I want you to ask yourself these questions. Ask your friends, neighbors, and relatives. If the train takes longer than your current commute, will you take it? If the connections in town are difficult, will it be worth it? I predict that a small percentage of people will end up taking the train.

I would love it if my children could have the option to live here, with a similar standard of living that I enjoy today. I know that things change. But we have control over the type of change in this case. It's not too late unless you believe that. It's not too late in West Cornwall, Conn., where people are fighting to get the train out because of the loud whistle blowing throughout the night. Don't give up now. If you don't like the forecast for the future of this town with the train, speak up now. Governor Weld has an obligation to listen to us and he has not taken a stand on this yet. The power is in the present!

The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863

Black-eyed Susan

The black-eyed susan doesn't care
To grow in a garden bed.
She'd rather ramble through the wood
Or by the road instead.
Her leaves are coarse—
Her colors crude—
Yet she is more than vain.
I think that in her family
There is a gypsy strain.

(From 'These Blooming Friends, A Little Book of Garden Scandal,' by L. Young Correthers.)

The grounds at the home of Ronald and Lena Goldberg, 15 Nichols Rd., have beds of Black-eyed Susan — ride by to enjoy this wonderful display of color!

Eco systems explored

The Cohasset Garden Club will sponsor an open meeting next Wednesday, Sept. 14, at 7 p.m. to be held at the new Cohasset Lightkeeper's Cottage on Border Street.

Dr. Edward Stashko, professor of Ecological Restoration for the Radcliffe Seminars, will be the featured speaker. He also serves as director of "The School for Field Studies" in Beverly, MA, for which he travels extensively, having recently returned from three weeks with the program in Costa Rica. Among other countries where he is responsible for similar teaching programs in ecological restoration are Africa, Australia and Indonesia. His talk, accompanied by slides, will discuss the status of the natural world about us and explore the value systems and alternatives for restoring eco systems around the globe.

Because of the interest generated by such a knowledgeable speaker, the Garden Club invites the public. The meeting begins at 7 p.m. and refreshments will be served; for further information, please call Margaret Cotter at 383-1206.

A member of the Massachusetts Federation of Garden Clubs and the Garden Club of America, the Cohasset Garden Club's purpose is to "stimulate the knowledge and love of gardening...to restore, improve and protect the quality of the environment, through programs and action in the fields of conservation, civic improvements and education."

Book signing at Buttonwood

Dr. Arthur Kornhaber, clinician, researcher, medical writer and Cohasset resident will sign copies of his new book, "Grandparent Power! How to Strengthen the Vital Connection Among Grandparents, Parents and Children," at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset from 3 to 5 p.m. Sunday Sept. 11.

Dr. Kornhaber, an internationally known authority on the grandparent-grandchild relationship, is the director of the longest ongoing grandparenting research project. He is also the author of several books and articles on the topic, including "Grandparents/ Grandchildren: The Vital Connection," written with Kenneth Woodward of "Newsweek." This book has been used as a research cornerstone of the grandparent rights movement.

In 1980, Dr. Kornhaber and his wife established the Foundation for Grandparenting, a non profit organization dedicated to raising awareness about the importance of intergenerational relationships. Since then, the foundation has started many programs for grandparents.

Call 383-2665 for information.

Auditions in Cohasset

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will begin its 73rd season with the presentation of "Little Women." Auditions will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium at 2 p.m. Sunday Sept. 11 and 7 p.m. Monday Sept. 12.

Director Amy Wilder will be auditioning for four girls ages 12 to 17, a teen-aged boy, two men and two women for the cast.

The show will be produced November 27 and 27 and December 2, 3, 4, 9, 10 and 11.

To borrow a script, or for information call Dawn Rota at 545-3195.

'Pierson to Person'

Thursday Sept. 8, Wigmore Pierson's guest will be New York Congressman Amo Houghton (R-Corning, NY), a member of the House of Representatives since 1986 who serves on the influential House Ways and Means Committee. The crime bill, health reform legislation, the Clinton presidency, fall election prospects for the Republicans and the Cuban boat refugees will be discussed.

"Pierson to Person" is broadcast live from 8 to 9 p.m. each Thursday from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channel 53 in Hingham and Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset and Scituate. The public is invited to be part of the studio audience. Those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Road by 7:30 p.m.

For information call Robert Belliveau at 545-2500.

Pancake breakfast planned

First Parish Unitarian Universalist church, 23 North Main St. will host a pancake breakfast from 9 to 10 a.m. Sunday Sept. 11 before the 10:30 a.m. worship service in the parish house.

The menu includes coffee, juice, sausage and either plain or blueberry pancakes. Donations of $15 for adults and $.75 for children 10 and under will be accepted.

Parenting workshops set

INSIGHT Center for Parenting Education, 1130 Washington St., Route 53, Hanover is offering two evening workshops in September.

A workshop entitled, "Step Out Of Your Emotions — Step Back Into Control," will be offered from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday Sept. 20. The cost is $20 per person.

A two-part workshop on "The Challenging Child — Raising a Child Who Really Pushes Your Buttons," is scheduled from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday Sept. 21 and 28. The cost is $35 per person.

Call 829-0080 for information.

AAUW plans dinner

Free tickets to 'Big E'

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has two free tickets to the "Big E," the Eastern States Exposition, which will be given to anyone who is interested. Priority will be given to those families whose children participated in the summer reading program, "Ticket to Read."

The "Big E" is held in West Springfield from Sept. 16 to Oct. 2. In addition to livestock exhibits and events, there will be food courts, a circus, musical performances, the Thrill Show, a rodeo, and much more. Children age 5 and under are admitted free. All shows are free with the daily ticket.

If you are interested in the tickets, call the library at 383-1348. The Eastern States Exposition is donating these tickets to public libraries which have participated in the statewide summer reading program.

Library story hours

Registrations are currently being accepted for the fall series of preschool story hours at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The series will begin Oct. 6 and 7, and will last for six weeks. Sessions will be offered at 10 a.m. Thursdays and Fridays. Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and simple fingerplays, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 to participate.

To register, call the children's librarian at 383-1348.

New CDROM service

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Cohasset, has two new CDROM services ready for public use. The products are SIRS RESEARCHER and SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER.

The computer workstation and the two CDROM services are on loan for the summer from the Cohasset High School.

Each CDROM can hold nearly 190,000 pages of text.

SIRS (Social Issues Resources Series) RESEARCHER provides full text of thousands of articles selected from over 800 sources from 1988 to the present. These articles relate to the sciences, social issues, global events, historic, economic and political information.

SIRS GOVERNMENT REPORTER gives full text of selected articles from publications of federal government departments, agencies and commissions. It also includes a congressional directory, with information on U.S. Senate and House members and their staffs.

Both files are searchable by key word, or by subject category, or by names of persons or agencies. Summaries of articles or the articles may be read on screen or printed.

political notes

For the first time in the campaign, Sen. Brian McDonald has struck back at opponents' attempts to link him with Senate President Billy Bulger in his campaign for reelection.

McDonald chose an East Braintree meeting to scold Tim Gage for pledging to elect a Senate president (Bill Keating) "whose campaign manager and closest political adviser has been a key public relations lobbyist for Clean Harbors, Inc."

"One of the issues that made me suspicious of Bill Keating's real intentions was his decision to hire Michael Goldman to run and recruit candidates for his Senate presidency campaign," said McDonald.

He noted the unsuccessful attempt by Clean Harbors to build a toxic waste incinerator on the banks of the Fore River.

"Michael Goldman was the hired spin doctor for a corporation that wanted to incinerate toxins in the middle of our neighborhoods," said McDonald. "What kind of a red tape do you suppose he could cut if his good friend Bill Keating is made Senate president?"

McDonald said Gage has shown "naiveté" in pledging his support to Keating.

"Clean Harbors has not yet given up on the idea of an incinerator on the Fore River," he said. "Fundamentally, an elected official needs to do what is in the best interests of his constituency and, by brokering his vote already, my opponent has made a commitment to sell out East Braintree."

Don Hussey, a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Senate, made a plea for a stronger two-party system.

"This campaign is about fundamental change in the makeup for the state legislature," he said. "In order to have a meaningful debate, where debate is to a mere exercise, we must have a balanced two-party system.

"Without a bi-partisan legislature we, the people, become the poor second cousins of democracy. It's only through a balanced legislature that we enact the most sensible and responsible legislation.

"Is it any wonder we are taxed to the point of frustration? Is it any wonder that the giveaway programs of the social engineers have gone to far? Is it any wonder that our right to govern ourselves as a state has been weakened by local legislators who cave-in to the strong arm of the federal government?"

Gage, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the Plymouth-Norfolk State Senate seat, spoke at the "take back the Senate" rally at Faneuil Hall in Boston last week.

Gage said he will not support Billy Bulger for a record 17th year as Senate president. He noted that Sen. McDonald is uncommitted in the fight between Bulger and Sen. Keating of Sharon.

"McDonald's uncommitted status is the biggest joke on the South Shore," he said. "Uncommitted equals Bulger and Bulger equals status quo. Brian McDonald knows it and the people know it."

Gage told the 400 people at the rally that new rules are not enough to change the Senate since the Senate "often circumvents the rules to further the interests of the powerful few in the Senate leadership."

"We must elect new leaders with a mindset to change and open up the legislative process and return the Senate to the people," he said.

Bill Forsyth, who will be an independent candidate in the Nov. 8 general election, led his basketball team, the Forsyth Senators, in the Three-on-Three Tournament sponsored by the Hull Village Association at the Bernie King Pavilion in Hull.

"Events like this are at the heart of why I am running," said Forsyth. "These people care about their community, about the kids and about the quality of life shared by all.

"During the day, many residents told me I had been down here more than the incumbent. The incumbent doesn't seem to go into Hull unless he's chasing votes."

Forsyth chastised all his opponents for creating "false images" of his during their campaigns.

"Caution must be taken with the amount of money these politicians plan to spend on a media blitz," he said.

"Brian McDonald repeated flip-flops on welfare, tunnel construction in Hingham, the death penalty and voting for Billy Bulger are clear examples of his paid consultants attempts at manipulating the voters.

"Bob Hedlund's latest campaign literature claims he 'is pledged not to accept . . . special interest PAC contributions. The fact is that during a forum in Weymouth . . . Bob said he accepted PAC support from his party's state committee.

"I am the only person not accepting any special interest contributions."

The Democratic town committees that make up "Coop Eight" will host a comedy night tomorrow night (Thursday) starting at 7:30 p.m. at Playoff's sports club, 500 Washington St., Weymouth.

Proceeds will be used to support efforts of member committees to elected Democratic candidates to office.

"Coop Eight" represents the town committee of Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Marshfield and Duxbury.

The comedy night is open to the public for a $15 admission fee and tickets may be purchased in advance by calling Ellie Mayers, chairman of the Norwell Democratic Town Committee, at 659-2661.

The evening will include an auction of items donated by Sen. Ted Kennedy, Cong. Gerry Studds and Rep. Shannon O'Brien of Easthampton, a candidate for state treasurer.

Carolyn Van Tine, one of the candidates for the Republican nomination for Plymouth-Norfolk senator, has named Robert Piazza and Gretchen Lundin to serve as her campaign coordinators in Weymouth.

Citizens to Elect Don Hussey to the State Senate will hold a campaign rally Saturday, Sept. 11, from 12:40 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the Weymouth Elks Hall, 1197 Washington St.

GOP to gather Sept. 18

South Shore Republicans and Independents will gather for the annual Cohasset GOP Cook-out at the oceanfront home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, Sunday, Sept. 18, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. Open to the public, all South Shore residents are invited to attend but reservations must be made in advance by calling Jean Muir, 383-1850 or Polly Logan, 383-0031.

Donation is $10 per person and limited tickets at the door will be $15. All state, congressional, county and General Court candidates will be invited to attend and to speak, Chairman Guild noted.

Cook-out Treasurer will be Douglas Peck, and reservations may be mailed to his attention at 63 Windy Hill Road, Cohasset 02025.

"...BETTER NOT OLDER."
At Home Center Real Estate that's what we think about antique homes.

We believe that antique homes are an important part of our heritage on the South Shore. That's why we established an Antique Homes Division, and why we appointed Sandra Jenkins Pollack to head it up. Sandra's roots run deep on the South Shore, they go back to the 1600's, but that's not why she's in charge of our Antique Homes Division. She's in charge of the Division because of her 27 years of successful real estate sales experience, because of her training at the National Trust For Historical Preservation in Washington D.C., and because of her extensive knowledge about the characteristics which make antique homes so special.

Call us for a free consultation on the architectural integrity of your home, for advice on how to maintain or restore the architectural integrity of your antique home, or for an analysis of the current market value of your home.

Favorable weather could be key to Minots Light Roundabout

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

It has been a little more than a week since the best women sailors in the United States raced in the prestigious Adams Cup sailing regatta out of Cohasset Harbor.

The harbor will again be the site of a popular local event on the water that has been growing steadily in its seven years.

Up to 50 sliding seat, ocean shells and stretch dories will set off on from the Breakwater Inn, this Sunday afternoon (3 p.m.) for the 7th Annual Minots Light Roundabout rowing race.

"I'm pleased that the weather conditions look as though they'll be favorable," said roundabout founder, Jack Hubbard.

With pelting rain giving way to large swells earlier in the week, Hubbard said moderate conditions would be a welcome relief to the rowers entered in the 5-1/2 mile race.

"Today (Wednesday) would be a little

When you bump into Hanover High track coach, and all-around good guy, Dave Knight, offer him congratulations on his recently being named the head girls cross-country coach at Archbishop Williams High School in Braintree.

Anyone who knows the effort and enthusiasm Knight brought to the Indians' program last spring, should have little doubt the Bishops are in good hands this fall under his direction.

Now that the Summer of '94 is behind us and the fall sports season will be getting underway in no time flat, now's as good a time as any to look back on those things we'll miss about the warm summer months and take a peek at what's in store for us this autumn.

• The odds of the avid sailors in Cohasset and Scituate taking a header into the drink increases with the stronger autumn winds. Why anyone would want to spend a weekend day sailing in the fall when he or she could be taking in a football game or some other autumnal activity is beyond me. But then again, so is sailing.

• We in the sports department have to struggle over whether or not to call Hingham High's female athletes Harbormen, Harborwomen or Harborpersons. Political correctness makes me want to bar...excuse me...vomit.

• I've made my mind up to find that athlete on the South Shore who can give "110 percent." I've never seen him or her, but most every coach tells me they're out there. I want to find the person and offer a handshake.

• It'll soon be time to fight past the press-box stiffs at the weekly football games. These buffoons believe they have the right to a reserved space in the already tight quarters solely on the fact that they led their Little League squad to the town championship just a few months earlier.

These are usually the same guys who act as if they want to tear you a new one when you have the gall to say "excuse me" when trying to squeeze between their beer bellies and the Patriot Ledger reporter for a closer look at the game.

• Then there's the inevitable weekly staring contest I end up having with some uptight parent who was offended by something he or she may have read in the previous week's "Extra Points."

These are the same people who refuse to give their name when they call on Monday morning and threaten to cancel their subscriptions. I've been saving dimes over the summer to pass out at games for your autumn phone calls.

• But it's not only the parents. There are a small number of coaches out there who tell me when the "best time" to call them is. Usually it's sometime on a Sunday night after they're home and relaxing from their activity-filled weekend.

But it gets better. When I do call, usually after 9 p.m., they act is if I'm

Record field expected for SIDS Road Race

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The 13th edition of the SIDS Road Race and Run-a-Thon is on pace for its biggest field ever when a field of close to 500 runners is expected to answer the starters gun, this Sunday morning at Hingham High School.

The scenic, 10 Kilometer (6.2 miles) course, which starts at 10:30 a.m., follows a 2-mile fun run and 10K walk-a-thon at 9:30 a.m. Runners and walkers should check in beginning at 8 a.m. Post-entry fee is $6 for the fun run and walk, and $10 for the race.

Race committee member Art Chaves said the number of pre-entries is ahead of '93's pace. He is optimistic even more runners will turn out for the popular South Shore race.

"Hopefully we'll have more this year," Chaves said.

The loop-shaped route starts at the high school and follows Union Street to the entrance of Wompatuck State Park.

on the calm side," Hubbard said. "We like swells, up to white caps."

The rowers will set out from the Breakwater Inn in Cohasset Harbor and head east before making the turn at Minots Light and heading back to the finish.

The race will feature the Alden Ocean Shell and a British Silley Isles Gig, owned by the Hull Lifesaving Museum. Hubbard said he expects half of the participants to be rowing in the 16-foot ocean shells. The shells are mainly single boats, but there are some doubles that will also race.

The stretch dories can hold anywhere from one to 16 rowers, depending on the size of the craft. A John Warren surf boat, renovated by the Cohasset Alternative School will also compete.

Among those entered are the Cape Cod Vikings, who sponsor a six-seated boat among their contingent of crafts.

Hubbard said it is important that entrants be experienced in ocean rowing because of the various adverse conditions that can exist. The sea around Minots has a history of being particularly choppy this time of year.

Rowers used to start from Sandy Beach but the location was changed to Cohasset Harbor because "even the day after a storm, it was still tough to launch.

"People would be soaking wet just trying to get their boats in the water," Hubbard said.

The race has grown in numbers since its first year when 15 rowers fought for first-place honors.

Hubbard said the race winner "generally finishes in an hour," while a "fast double might make it in in less time."

going out of my way to bother them. Well it's not easy for me either. I could be listening to the sweet tunes of The Partridge Family, Bay City Rollers and ABBA during the final hour of Barry Scott's "Lost 45s." If nothing else, I've learned that David Cassidy waits for no man.

• Of course there's there are the coaches who tell me to talk only to them, not to their players. These coaches, thankfully, are also in the minority. And by the way sirs, have you ever heard of the expression "In one ear and out the other." Now that we understand each other, just what is your quarterback's phone number? I have the dime.

• Then come those confrontations with the lunatic fringe that border on becoming physical. This summer a Hingham resident, who possessed the sense of humor of a wall hanging, started to invade my personal space (how's that for political correctness) outside MaryLou's News in Cohasset because of tongue-in-cheek comments I made concerning the proposal for the Greenbush line to pass through Hingham Square.

He told me he didn't appreciate my "flip attitude" towards what is a serious issue in Hingham. I agreed with the gentleman that the line should be re-routed — through one side of his home and out the other. That would surely bring a smile to Thomas Train's face, not to mention my own.

• Now all we're hearing about the "charismatic" Kato Kailin. Excuse me, but isn't this the same gell-less Christian Slater who acted like a mummy when he took the stand during O.J. Simpson's pre-trial hearing?

I can hardly wait for Howard and Robin to get back from vacation so they can get busy tearing into this Talk Soupster.

• And finally: How long do we have to listen to those bleeding hearts who still believe O.J. is innocent? If Simpson is innocent, then I'm Peter Gammons.

And how that A.J. Cowlings turned into a hero by abetting in O.J.'s scamper from the cops is a real puzzle. However, we have to remember that if this were you or me up on these charges, we'd be charbroiled by now.

What they should do is take this Cowlings nitwit and dangle 15-20 years in jail in front of his face — with a con named "Bo Bo." Knowing A.C., he'd rather do the time than tell the authorities what he knows about O.J.'s role in this whole mess.

Case closed. Bring on the Menendes brothers!

Then again, forget those two. The afternoon couch potato, bon bon eating crowd wants Luke and Laura back on a daily basis.

The risk of injury is something that is always out there. Sports may be fun and games to a lot of people, but it only takes one play to put things into perspective.

Injuries and their consequences were a big topic Labor Day weekend.

On the positive side, Miami Dolphin Dan Marino, one of the top NFL quarterbacks, came back from a torn Achilles tendon to have a great game against the Patriots.

Many people had written off Marino saying he was too old and could no longer do the job. However, he went out and threw for more than 400 yards and five touchdowns.

It was a triumph over adversity was inspirational to many fans.

On the flip side was the injury sustained by LA Raider Napoleon McCallum during Monday night's Raiders-49ers match-up.

McCallum, a top running back who made the NFL after serving in the Navy, took the ball and battled for extra yards against the stingy 49er defense early in the second half.

Stacked at the line of scrimmage, several players hit McCallum and his leg bent back in an angle that legs aren't supposed to bend.

McCallum broke his leg as no leg could bend the way his did without serious damage.

The injury was so bad that the replay was shown only once by ABC.

After the replay ran, the announcers compared the injury with the broken leg suffered by Redskin Joe Theisman on Monday Night Football several years ago.

On that injury, ABC showed about 57 replays from all different angles. It was gruesome.

The fun mood of the opening game of Monday Night Football was shattered for me and many viewers.

I was watching the game with a few friends and all the laughing and good times stopped when the replay was shown.

In fact, one person was so bummed out about the injury, he stopped watching the game.

It was the type of injury that could happen on any play.

Serious injuries occur at all levels of sports.

Covering high school sports last year, I saw a girls' soccer player tear her anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) during a high school soccer game.

The injury occurred on a simple play and did not look that serious.

However, the damage was done and she missed the rest of the soccer season as well as the winter and spring track season.

I also saw a boys' soccer goalie get kicked in the head during a goal-mouth scramble. He was taken to the hospital by ambulance with a mild concussion. He missed a couple games of action but came back 100 percent.

I also saw a quarterback break his leg while scrambling for extra yardage on third down.

And I saw a tailback break his leg on a harmless looking screen pass. Both missed the rest of the season.

Those were just the injuries I saw in person last year. Many more occurred and dozens of other minor injuries, such as sprains, cuts and bruises, happened all the time.

The reality is the human body is not meant to bend, collide and twist the way it does during some sports. And those who play the game are tempting fate.

One athlete can play for 10 years without so much as an ankle sprain while another can play for ten minutes and tear up a knee.

The fall high school sports season is about to begin and here's hoping there'll be no more stories about injuries.

Seeing a running back break his leg in super slo-mo in front of 50 million people is enough for me.

SIDS Road Race. . .

Save for a steep hill the runners have to traverse at the 1—1/2 mile mark, the course is mainly flat with some gentle, rolling hills.

The race has been a consistent fund raiser for the Massachusetts Center for Sudden Infant Death Syndrome with more than $100,000 gathered over the past 13 years. Funds are also directed to Dr. Hannah Kinney, the leading researcher of the brain stem.

Approximately $15,000 was raised in last year's race, alone.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome is the largest single cause of deaths in infants between the ages of one week and a year old. More than 7,000 infants a year die from SIDS in the United States alone.

1994 fall recreation soccer

The Cohasset Recreation Department fall soccer registrations will be held for boys and girls in grades kindergarten through six at town hall, Saturday, Sept. 10, from 9 to 11 a.m. The fee for the program is $15, not including an optional $5 T-shirt charge. Checks for the program fee should be made payable to "Town of Cohasset."

The fall recreation soccer program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Soccer Club and the recreation department.

Registrations will also be taken for fifth/sixth- and seventh/eighth-grade travel teams which will play Sunday afternoons.

Fall soccer registration this Saturday

Registration for the Cohasset Recreation Department In-Town and traveling team fall soccer programs will be held Saturday, Sept. 10, from 9 to 11 a.m. at Town Hall. Players Grades K-6 are eligible for the In-Town program, which is a Saturday program of 6-on-6 soccer games. Players grades 5-8 are eligible for the traveling team program which is a Sunday program of games against other local area towns. Players may sign up for either program or both. The season will begin Saturday, Sept. 24, and run for six weeks.

Applications will be available at Town Hall prior to Sept. 10. Registration will be on a space available basis. Registration fee is $15 per player for each program plus $5 for a T-shirt. Call Jack Worley at the Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, for more details.

Knights of Columbus swim team completes season

The Scituate Knights of Columbus swim team completed its season, recently finishing third in the seven team South Shore Championship. The team amassed 342.5 points just 2.5 points behind second-place Hanover Swim and Tennis, and league winner, Cohasset's Swim Club. The coaching staff, Beth Dunn, Karen Coyne, Tim Burke and Katie Vannata, along with assistant coaches Chris Angland and Melissa Cannorozi, were very pleased with the team's efforts — its highest finish in a decade — and believe the next few years should be better ones, with many young swimmers returning to the team. There were more than 100 swimmers on this year's team which won four of six dual meets.

The members of the team that had first-place finishes at the championship were: Chris Hermance, 50 yard free; Erin Murphy, 50-yard fee; Bob Foley, 50-yard free; Anne Murphy, 50-yard free; Erin Murphy, 50 yard fly; Dante Cannarozzi, 50 yard fly; Anne Murphy, 50 yard fly; Ganet Jocobucci, 25-yard back; Kelly Murphy, 50 yard back. Girls relay, 200-yard free; girls medley relay, 200 yard; boys relay, 100-yard free.

The director of the pool, Jim Zotz, was "elated" with this team's efforts and dedication and attributed its strong showing to the coaching staff and leadership of the senior members of the team.

Fate of Music Circus hospitality tent in question

By Joyce Bain
Mariner correspondent

The South Shore Music Circus promised to discontinue use of an additional tent for the remainder of its season as the result of an appeal brought before the Cohasset Zoning Board at last Thursday's meeting. The tent, a smaller version of the well-known large concert tent, was being rented out to private parties for birthdays and other celebrations.

According to Robert Vallencourt, a resident of Sohier St., after first learning of the additional tent through a Mariner article, he was later bothered by the raising and lowering of it on an almost daily basis. He had requested the building inspector, Robert Egan, who was also present at Thursday's sitting, to look into the matter, as well as an additional matter concerning the use of an automobile in the parking lot for advertising purposes. The inspector found no violation of town by-laws, believing the circus' practices to be within its permit.

Unsatisfied, Vallencourt appealed to the Zoning Board, putting forth that the permit issued at the beginning of the season did not cover the use of an additional tent for catered parties. However, Vincent Longo, the general manager of the Music Circus, claimed the tent and automobile both had been used in the past.

According to Longo, the car advertisement was actually the result of a trade established between the circus and an auto dealership for chauffeur service and publicity. He added that only concert-goers could see the advertisement, as the car is parked away from the road, and several other ads are placed around the circus tent.

"We're having a tough year," he said. "One of our toughest."

However, Vallencourt, along with resident Joseph Rosano, maintained that the tent and car were in violation of the town by-laws. A large portion of the case rests on whether or not these practices began before 1955, when the by-laws were revised. Longo is currently searching for proof of their longevity.

Although the Zoning Board broke the sitting by declaring they would take the matter under advisement, there appeared to be a definite leaning toward the belief that the Music Circus was, in fact, in violation of the by-laws.

Myrna Putziger, chairperson of the group, told Longo: "You should use the premise that every new idea violates the by-law."

However the Board decides, there will be no immediate effect since the Music Circus season closed last Saturday, only two days after the sitting.

Commenting on the timing of his appeal, Vallencourt said: "I've waited this long hoping some change would be made. It seems to be getting worse and worse all the time. They just don't seem to care anymore."

Longo plans to take the matter up for next season.

"I do believe we will be in front of the board in the future for discussion of the hospitality tent. I would like to keep the children's parties; it gives them a chance to meet the stars of the children's shows. It's really a community effort."

Also to have been discussed at Thursday's meeting was the proposal for a supermarket in Cushing Plaza, which was continued from its Aug. 4 session. This has been put off until the next Zoning Board of Appeals meeting, Sept. 22.

Junior Voices begin again

Junior Voices is a choral program for young si[ng]ers grades 4-7 from all over the South Shore, direc[te]d by Margo Euler. The new semester will begin Tu[es]day Sept. 20, with registration at 4 p.m.; class time in the following weeks will be Tuesday from 4 to 5:15 p.m.

This fall pre-registration by phone is required, since as of press time the exact location of rehearsals in Hingham is still under negotiation. Families considering enrollment should leave a message at 749-6561 by Saturday, Sept. 10. Please leave parent and child's name, grade, phone, address. Those curious about the program can see and hear Junior Voices on the special Continental Cable program "Singing Sea to Sea" produced by Director Margo Euler this summer; it airs Saturday, Sept. 10 at 6 p.m. and Wednesday Sept. 14 at 9 p.m. on Channel 53.

JVs classes combine a rehearsal structure (to give children the sense of accomplishment found in preparing choral music for performance) with a class environment in which note-reading skills are taught. Each hour's activities include games, songs, and drills to improve music reading and the ability to sing with proper voice production in 2 and 3 parts. No audition is necessary, but children considering enrollment should have a strong love of singing, good attention span and ability to match pitches accurately; parents are urged to view Junior Voices as a year-long commitment.

State senate race tops Tuesday's primary

By Tom Henshaw
Mariner staff

A man whose name is not on a Cohasset ballot will play a key role in the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate District race next Tuesday when voters go to the polls.

But will opposition attempts to pin Billy Bulger as Senate president on incumbent Sen. Brian McDonald be successful?

And will the issue be strong enough to turn the tide in Tim Gage's fight to oust McDonald from the Democratic primary?

Thus far, the election has roused little interest in the voters of the district, which now includes three precincts in East Braintree along with the coastal towns from Weymouth to Duxbury.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas predicts a low voter turnout among the town's 4,718 registered voters. The polls — at the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium — will

Pro-Greenbush people crash anti-train presentation

By Mary Ford

Dire predictions ranging from death at grade crossings to students' inability to concentrate if the Greenbush train should travel through town provoked a heated exchange at the selectmen's meeting Monday between anti- and pro-rail residents.

While the initial presentation by the Coastal Coalition, a locally-based anti-Greenbush group, was made by out-of-towners — Cohasset residents on both sides were vocal on the issue.

To keep the meeting on television, selectmen opted to stay in their cramped quarters rather than move the packed and emotionally charged meeting to the town hall auditorium.

And viewers at home probably weren't disappointed as nearly 50 people jockeyed for position in the board's upstairs office to try to hear and be heard on what is becoming an increasingly volatile topic.

Selectmen's meetings are televised live on cable from their office. The auditorium was not set up with

Public charter school takes root

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

The trustees and the new staff of the South Shore Charter School held the first of its monthly Intergenerational Seminars in Cohasset last week to discuss the innovative new public school and its goals for its first year.

Hull resident Timothy Anderson is the chairman and administrator for the new school and it is his company, Dovetail Consulting that is footing the bill for the bold venture.

Anderson is not only a concerned parent but has been very involved with the Hull public school system as both a volunteer and a hired consultant, raising money and providing strategic planning for Hull Schools.

'America does a great job of educating the rest of the world.'

— Suffolk University's Dr. Walter Johnson of Cohasset.

And Anderson had some very innovative ideas about integrating projects and academics. These ideas never got passed the superintendent, the school committee and local teachers unions, so Anderson decided to start out fresh with an entirely new kind of public school - a charter school.

The charter school notion was one of the innovative

Cohasset's week

Safe Homes conference

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee will host a regional "Safe Homes" conference Wednesday., Sept. 21, at 7:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Lightkeepers House on Cohasset Harbor. Representatives from surrounding towns are invited.

The conference objective is to share ideas in an effort to strengthen each community's program.

For more information call Ted Carroll at 383-9900.

Zoning bylaws ready

The Cohasset zoning bylaws have been revised and reprinted. They are for sale in the Building Inspector's Office and the Planning Board Office for $10.

Interviewers sought

The Cohasset school system is forming a screening committee to interview candidates for the position of elementary principal. Anyone interested in serving on this committee should call Stephen E. Hart, Superintendent of Schools, at 383-6111.

Absentee ballots available

Absentee ballots are available at the town clerk's office for the primary Tuesday Sept. 20. Anyone may apply for an absentee ballot if they will be out of town, have a physical disability or because of religious beliefs.

Absentee voting may be done in the office of the town clerk during regular business hours until noon Monday Sept. 19. Those voters who cannot get to the clerk's office should mail a written request for a ballot to the town clerk. Included in the application letter should be the voters name as registered, party designation,m registration address, precinct, address where the ballot should be sent and the voter's signature. Applications may also be picked up at the office.

The clerk's office will be closed at noon Monday Sept. 19 to prepare for the election.

For more information call the clerk's office at 383-9900, ext. 105, 106 or 107.,

Cohasset's PALS is part of DARE collaborative

Ten South Shore towns have consolidated their DARE programs this year as a means of sharing information and ideas on teaching techniques and fundraising.

And while Cohasset does not have a DARE officer, Police Chief Brian Noonan said that Lisa Matos, the town's PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools) for wellness officer will represent Cohasset in the new alliance.

Like the DARE officers in surrounding communities, Matos works with students on issues of safety, health and drug and alcohol abuse.

Noonan said he looks forward to being part of the new DARE Task Force and "be in line for some state grants."

The task force includes Braintree, Canton, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Stoughton.

DARE officers from these communities will meet once a month and go over problems they've faced and program activities that have been successful in the classroom. Hingham's DARE officer Michael Peraino is pleased with the new alliance.

"It's a chance for all DARE officers to get together and go over problems that face each town," said Peraino, who noted that one town's problems can easily become another's.

Working together can also save these community programs money, by ordering supplies in bulk and earning group rates.

Noonan said Cohasset's program, which got underway at the end of last year seems to be working well and he looks forward to the exchange of ideas through the new DARE collaborative.

Two years isn't a long time,
But, it's been long enough
for Brian McDonald to do this:

- Reduce rush-hour openings of the Fore River Bridge
- Secure over $62,000,000 in additional local aid for more police, firefighters and teachers.
- Save taxpayers $45,000,000 by fighting special interest bond bills
- Secure $1.5 million to pay for South Shore dredging projects
- Force the state to move forward with Greenbush Commuter rail restoration
- Secure $1.5 million funds to develop the new Abigail Adams State Park
- Pass legislation restricting X-rated video stores
- Secure over $58,000,000 in MWRA rate relief
- Work for the passage of the tough, new "Truth in Sentencing" Law

Name: Jane Henderson

Occupation: Ambulance Billing/Collections clerk for the Cohasset Fire Department.

Best day of your life: The day I left on a ski trip to Engleberg, Switzerland and met the guy I married.

Goal: To see that my three children graduate from college and that I run the Boston Marathon.

Biggest worry: The daily increase in crime and violence in our society and its impact on today's youth.

Most embarrassing moment: Prior to my usual five-mile run one cold February morning, I applied a heavy dose of "heat" liniment to an aching muscle. About three miles into the run, I realized that I had applied too much liniment and felt like I was burning up. I finally had to resort to sitting in a snow bank on the side of Jerusalem Road in order to put out the "fire"!

Best vacation: Skiing at Alta/Snowbird, Utah.

Favorite holiday: Christmas.

Favorite book: "Kane and Abel," by Jeffrey Archer.

Favorite TV show: "Frasier."

Favorite movie: It will always be "The Sound of Music."

Favorite season: I really enjoy all four!

Favorite junk-food: Cashew nuts (unsalted).

Pet peeve: Insincerity.

Pro-Greenbush people crash presentation

TV equipment Monday.

Selectman Peter Pratt, who is opposed to restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad, helped members of the Coastal Coalition get on the agenda.

And what Coalition members meant to be a 45-minute presentation with a dozen speakers lobbying selectmen to take a stand against the train — quickly turned into a sparring match as pro-train people interrupted and demanded to be heard.

After fellow selectmen Jane Goedecke and Pratt implored him to do so, Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan, who later apologized for losing control of the proceedings, cut the Coalition time short to allow for rebuttal from rail proponents.

Ann Musto said deaths would increase dramatically because of numerous grade crossings.

Cheryl McClellan said the train which will pass by the Osgood school "will be distracting to the children and draw attention away from the teacher."

Doug Yeager urged the board to take a vote.

"Tell us where you stand on the issue," he said.

David Whipple said his children did fine at Osgood when the train came through town 40 years ago.

Frederick Gamst of Forest Ave. said "gated" crossings are very safe. He said statistics of people killed are skewed because open crossings in open farm country are where most deaths occur.

"To raise the specter of grade crossing accidents with gated crossings is unreasonable," he said.

Ed Woods of Jerusalem Road said he'd called police departments in several towns which have commuter rail and asked what the safety factor was.

"It was negligible to zero," Woods said.

Louis Eaton who represents the town on the MBTA advisory board said in the end the decision should be based on "good judgement and common sense."

Asking for Cohasseters only, Selectmen Chairman Sullivan did not permit Back-on-Track chairman William Grimes of Hingham to speak. Two out-of-town members of the Coastal Coalition, Randy Young of Hingham and Ilana Marks of Scituate, made presentations. Sullivan pointed out that group had asked to be on the agenda.

Fire Capt. Bob Silvia arrived just as the meeting was breaking up.

Silvia said he was responding to a call from a concerned citizen that the room was overcrowded. He said he didn't think the room had a posted capacity but did speak to Sullivan about the complaint.

Greenbush the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project is still in the study stage. An environmental feasibility study on Greenbush will be available to the public later this fall. Environmental Affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe will also hold the public hearing on the report. Construction on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines of the project has begun.

Candidates on cable tonight

Tonight (Thursday), Sept. 15, host Wigmore Pierson's guests on a special two-hour edition of "Pierson to Person" are, (from 8 to 9 p.m.), Sen. Brian McDonald and his primary challenger, Timothy Gage.

In the second hour, 9 to 10 p.m., Pierson's guests are Republican candidates, former Sen. Robert Hedlund, Carolyn VanTine and Donald Hussey.

The "Pierson to Person" television show is broadcast live each Thursday, 8 to 9 p.m., from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channel 53 in Hingham, and on Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset and Scituate.

The public is invited to be part of the studio audience each Thursday evening and those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Rd. by 7:30 p.m.

Mike Reynolds is right at home in funeral business

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

Even back at Scituate High in the mid-1960's, Michael Reynolds knew what he wanted to do.

"I liked anything with sciences: biology, anatomy, pathology," recalls the Beechwood Street resident.

In his Class of '67 yearbook, many of his friends wrote notes alluding to a future for Reynolds in the funeral business.

Twenty-seven years later, Reynolds proved them right. He is still directing funerals, a career he loves.

"I wouldn't be here if I didn't like it," he says.

Reynolds, a Cohasset resident for ten years, is manager of the Gaffey Funeral Home in North Scituate and he recently took over management of the Richardson Funeral Home in Scituate.

Both funeral homes are owned by the Canadian-based Loewen Group which owns upwards of 900 funeral homes and cemeteries across North America and had revenues of $400 million in the past year.

"I got into the funeral business at 17 because I wanted to," Reynolds recalls.

Following high school, Reynolds worked for the Sparrell Funeral Home in Norwell while attending the New England Institute of Anatomy and later worked at the Richardson Funeral Home.

Reynolds has been with the Gaffey Funeral Home for 20 years, eight of those on a part-time basis while he worked as funeral director at Keohane Funeral Home in Quincy and the Pyne Funeral Home in Hingham.

Funeral business. . .

Former owner David Gaffey sold the Gaffey Funeral Home to the Loewen Group two years ago. The company bought the Richardson Funeral Home last month.

As manager, Reynolds deals with the day-to-day operations of the funeral homes from counseling families to arranging the funerals including embalming and makeup.

Although family-owned independent funeral homes seem to be going by the wayside, Reynolds said the fact the Gaffey and Richardson funeral homes are now owned by a large corporation hasn't changed anything as far as the public is concerned.

"I still serve families," he said. "I am still able to provide service on a personal level.

"I come to work everyday just like Dave Gaffey did in the town I grew up in."

Reynolds wife, Joni Reynolds is manager of the Cohasset Savings Bank in Cohasset. They have three children: Kristen, a freshman at CHS, Patrick, a junior, and Mike who's at Saint Anselm College in New Hampshire.

obituary

Thelma Katherine McKenna

Thelma Katherine (Connell) McKenna, 90, of Cohasset and formerly of Boston's Beacon Hill section, died September 10 following a period of failing health.

Born in Brookline, she was educated in area schools. Mrs. McKenna, a homemaker, entered corporate society in 1963, following the death of her husband, William N. McKenna, a plumbing and heating executive. She acted as company president for seven years before retiring. The company, bearing Mr. McKenna's name, was responsible for the plumbing and heating systems of famous Boston institutions, including the Boston Garden and the original John Hancock Building.

She leaves two sons, Jack P. Hamilton of Pittsburgh, Penn. and William N. McKenna of Duxbury; one daughter, Karen A. Sherrin of Cohasset and nine grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was held Sept. 14 in St. Anthony's Church. Burial was private in Holyhood Cemetery.

Bereavement support group meets

The Hingham Visiting Nurse is sponsoring a seven-week bereavement support group from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Thursdays at the Hingham Visiting Nurse office, 10 Downer Ave., Hingham.

The group is open to all those who have suffered the death of a family member or friend within the past year. Grace Lettis, LICSW, staff social worker and coordinator of bereavement services will facilitate the meetings.

There is no charge for the series but preregistration is required as space is limited. For information and registration call 749-1160.

OTOTOXIC EFFECT

For all the many benefits that it imparts to its users, aspirin can adversely affect the health of the ear. Many people (arthritis sufferers, for example) who take large amounts of this common over-the-counter medication report that they experience ringing in their ears (tinnitus). Aspirin is not the only medication to have an ototoxic effect (harm caused to the organs or nerves concerned with hearing and balance). Such antibiotics as streptomycin and neomycin, and certain diuretics (water pills) used to treat high blood pressure can damage the hair cells and other important components of the inner ear. Anyone who experiences hearing loss, tinnitus, or problems with balance while taking these or other medications should immediately report the symptoms to the prescribing physician.

If you are taking any of the medications listed above, and feel that you might be experiencing hearing loss, please consult with your physician and then come see us at THE HEARING CENTER. We belong to The American Speech, Hearing and Language Association, the Academy of Dispensing Audiologist and the American Academy of Audiology. Since 1972, we have been dedicated to improving and restoring the quality of life for individuals with hearing impairments. Our offices are conveniently located at 306 Washington St. (Rte. 53), Norwell, and 470 Southern Artery (Rte. 3-A), Quincy. Our phone number is 1-800-339-9316. Mastercard and Visa are accepted.

P.S. Other ototoxic medications include capreomycin, furosemide, and vancomycin (among many others).

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

ON SECOND MORTGAGES

QUESTION: I don't have enough cash for the down payment on an investment property. What do you think about a second mortgage?

ANSWER: If all the OTHER investment numbers fall into place, a second mortgage might be JUST your answer. The seller or some other lender may agree to loan you the balance of the down payment in this manner.

The second mortgage usually carries a higher interest rate and a shorter payment time – usually from three to five years. But, in today's financial climate, the second mortgage (or some sort of seller-assisted financing) is always an ingredient to consider in order to finalize a sale.

around town

by Sallyann Chatterton

Have you noticed that Mike Figuiredo hasn't been seen around town lately? For a super reason! Mike is now a student at UMass Dartmouth, studying biology, hoping to get into marine biology.

Mom, Janet, is singing the blues, although she is thrilled for him. as are his family and friends.

Best of luck to you Mike; let us know all about your college life.

Grace Silvia is one happy gal, thanks to the kindness of the South Shore Music Circus staff and the "Golden Boys of Bandstand."

Grace adores Fabian, Frankie Avalon and Bobby Rydell and was hoping to get their autographs. Well, the theatre got a grand promotional picture of the three, then had each one autograph it for her. You can just imagine how excited she was!

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute has announced the names of high school students who have been awarded the Rensselaer Medal, and Candice E. Buckley of 6 Hugh Strain Rd. was chosen!

Rensselaer has awarded the medal since 1916 to high school juniors who are chosen by their schools as the top students in science and mathematics and are awarded at more than 2,450 high schools in North America, South America, Europe and Asia.

Congratulations sure go to Candice!

John and Mia Dean had a real celebration recently, they have been married for 25 years! Their four children are so happy for them, and know that the next 25 will be even better for them. We're glad to hear that your day was a happy one!

Twenty-three men and women from New England recently earned the Graduate Certificate in Landscape Design from the Radcliffe Seminars Program at Radcliffe College. The part-time program emphasizes the interaction between human needs and the environment, and brings together professionals, practitioners, educators and students.

Cohasset's own Margaret Cotter was a 1994 graduate.

Celia Mullen of South Main St. (and St. Paul, Minn.) participated at championship level in the U.S. Amateur Ballroom Dancers Association 1994 National Competition, held at Lowell in the Memorial Auditorium Aug. 19 to 21. Celia with her partner, Jeffrey Chinn of Bloomington, Minn., reached the finals in both American Smooth (waltz, tango, fox-trot, and Viennese waltz) and American Rhythm (cha-cha, rumba, bolero, swing and mambo).

Celia Mullen of South Main St. (and St. Paul, Minn.) with her partner, Jeffrey Chinn of Bloomington, Minn., participated at championship level in the U.S. Amateur Ballroom Dancers Association 1994 National Competition, held at Lowell in the Memorial Auditorium Aug. 19 to 21. They reached the finals in both American Smooth (waltz, tango, fox-trot, and Viennese waltz) and American Rhythm (cha-cha, rumba, bolero, swing and mambo). American style allows for more open and adventurous moves than the more stylized International style which was also part of the competition.

Celia and Jeff placed sixth in Smooth, third in Rhythm, and took first place for the combined nine-dance title.

Helen and Al Livingston ha[illegible]eparted to the sunny south, and will now be living in Florida permanently. We hope that they have a long happy healthy life there, and that they keep in touch with their latest news!

Congratulations to Susan Glancy DiPesa, the new president of the Boston chapter of the National Association of Women in Construction! Susan is president of her SOMWBA-certified heavy equipment rental firm, the Gabrielle Company, which is based in Cohasset.

Speaking of "Wonder Women," how about Ann Leonard? Always active and on the move, did you know that she went on a power walk with Gov. Weld through the streets of Boston?

Luckily she didn't have to wear all of the medals that she has won through the years, she would have had to bring a wheelbarrow at least! What an inspiration; she is to so many!

Don't forget that the soccer teams are holding their pancake breakfast, buy a ticket from any player or at Stop and Shop, where the athletes are outside selling them for $3.

Our little Kelsie had her fifth birthday party last weekend, it was a "Power Ranger" day! Her little neighborhood friends had a great time, and the Power Ranger cake was a huge success! Even though she couldn't start kindergarten this year, her pediatrician gave her good news, she will be "one of the first to get her license in her class."

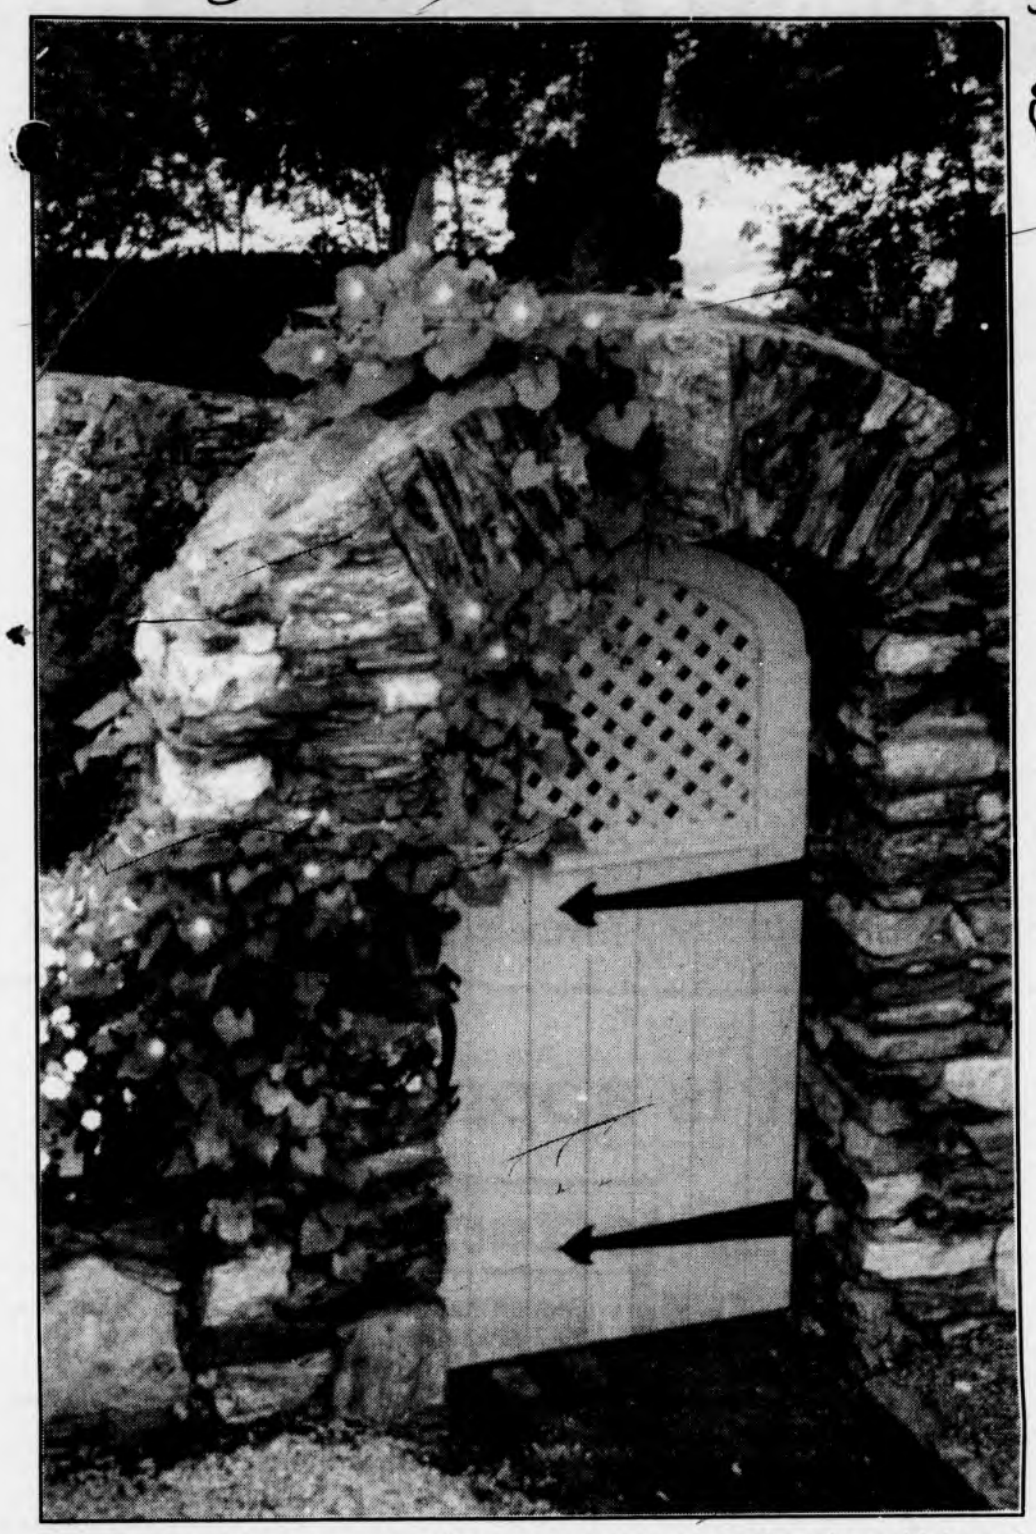
The Grand Tour — with Ginger Ferenz, 383-2863



When I started these morning-glory seeds inside during the rainy cold days of March, it was hard to imagine they would eventually bring me such pleasure each day when I look out my window to count how many blue blossoms are smiling up at me.

(From the garden of Ginger Ferenz)

The Morning Glory

When you meet a morning-glory,
Be careful how you act.
Look gentle, quiet and refined
And show a lot of tact.
The reason my seem very strange—
May seem unpleasant too—
He's the garden-plot policemen
In his uniform of blue.
He looks into your window
At early dawn—my dears—
To find out if you've said your prayers
And washed behind your ears.

Mom needed a helping hand... not a nursing home.

We all knew Mom was slowing down and could use some help, but even her doctor said she didn't need a nursing home. While she knew she could rely on us, Mom insisted she didn't want to be a burden to her children.

That's why we're all so glad she found a beautiful new home at Allerton House. Assisted living is a wonderful alternative: Mom gets the help she needs to stay as independent as possible, and she's already made a number of new friends.

Just say no

Inconclusive evidence following a liquor sale to a minor propelled selectmen to issue a warning this week to the license holder rather than mete out a more punitive measure like suspension of the license for period of time.

The decision came two weeks after a hearing in which the board heard conflicting testimony from the clerk who sold the beer at a local convenience store and the minor who purchased it.

The clerk said the youth showed an ID indicting he was 22 years old. The 20-year-old minor said he didn't show any identification.

Police arrested the purchaser and two other youths following the incident.

While the "warning" may seem unfair to the establishment, it does send the message that the town takes liquor sales to minors seriously.

But even more importantly, selectmen showed they want to help out. They decided to provide all liquor license holders with a Cohasset residents' list which includes the names, addresses and ages of all residents 18 and older.

That way if someone, who looks to be in the borderline age department shows an ID with a Cohasset address, the clerk can check the list.

We think this is a great idea and encourage neighboring towns to do the same. Perhaps selectmen could call their counterparts in Scituate and Hingham for some residents' lists to distribute to Cohasset license holders and visa versa.

In our years of covering liquor hearings, it's been the rare exception to find the establishment that knowingly sold alcohol to someone underage.

There is simply no way that most businesses would risk losing a liquor license even for a day or two — which could mean loss of hundreds or thousands of dollars in revenue — to make a few dollars on a beer sale.

Today the vast majority of managers and employees who sell alcohol participate in special classes which help them spot false identification.

Unfortunately, no amount of training will protect establishments all the time from someone clever enough to beat the system.

The residents 'lists could help.

But license holders should also be aware that they have the right to refuse to sell to anyone — even if that person presents what looks to be a legitimate Massachusetts license.

"They are not obliged to sell to anyone as long as that refusal is not based on a discriminatory practice," like race or gender, said Stuart Krusell, chairman of the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission.

"They can refuse to anyone based on the age thing," he said.

So if establishments are suspicious of someone's age, they should say, 'No.'

They've worked too hard to build their businesses to risk losing a liquor license because some kids had partying on their minds.

Benefit support is appreciated

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Permanent Firefighters wish to express our sincere thanks to everyone who participated in the Labor Day Weekend-in-One Contest.

We would also like to thank all our business supporters who generously donated prizes, especially South Shore Chevrolet who donated a 1994 Chevrolet pick-up truck as well as the cost of the Hole-in-One insurance for the vent.

A very special thank you to Cohasset Greens Driving Range for hosting the event. The donation of their facility, the construction of the green and the numerous hours of preparation and planning were essential to the success of the event.

The money that was raised will allow us to continue our support of the Muscular Dystrophy Association, as well as our Scholarship Fund.

In closing, on behalf of all the members of the department, we would like to thank everyone connected with this charitable event.

Rail Road cost ploy is corrected

To the Editor:

In the over-heated and over-fearful rhetoric coming out of the Coastal Coalition against the restoration of the Greenbush line there has been some wildly errant "economics" that begs correction.

A favorite statistical ploy has been to divide the anticipated cost by the number of anticipated commuters to come up with frightening numbers. This completely overlooks the fact that generations of commuters will be served, not just the original ones...let alone the likelihood that more riders will be attracted to a service so much more convenient and/or comfortable than car, bus or boat. The cost will be amortized over succeeding generations.

It reminded me of similar arguments against school budgets in the 1950's when opponents charged that a house with three children wasn't "paying its way," overlooking the fact that taxes may be paid on the property for years when no children live there. In my own case, only four children have gone to school from this house in 72 years...none in 40 of those years.

Citizen opposed to water management pick

(Ed's note: a copy of the following letter was sent to the Cohasset Mariner for publication.)

Board of Water Commissions:

I am writing to let you know that your decision to contract with Whitewater, Inc. for temporary management of the water system, appears to be a short sighted and expensive decision, to remain in the quagmire that has developed because of years of neglect, mismanagement and lack of water works professionals in the department.

As I see it, the problems are summed up by a recent quote of Mr. Montuori, "We don't know what we have got here."

He may be right; however, your commission had, in my opinion, the opportunity to hire temporarily the person who worked for the department for 22 years, superintendent for 14 (longer than any other superintendent in the history of the department), a water works professional for over 30 years. The person who helped conceive the town's long-range water works plan, oversaw construction of, and bring on line, one of the largest water works project in South Shore history. A person who began work in the department nine years after the town purchased the system, dug trenches and laid mains as outside foreman, developed and implemented the outside meter reader program. A person who under Massachusetts state law is qualified to manage the operation of the water system and plant, and who is willing to work for the good of the system and town, at a rate perhaps less than $30,000+/- for the period.

How will a professional outside firm give you the much needed wisdom about your system? You know they can't; because they haven't been there, and neither have you. Some think asking the masters for help during difficult times is good management.

It seems to many that your apparent oversight in not at least interviewing Mr. Edwin A. Pratt, is proof positive, you are determined to continue your unusual performance as commissioners.

Mr. Pratt may very possibly have been your best option to get the best water resources in the region on track.

Snapshots of state Senate candidates

With the state primary looming Sept. 20, The Mariner offers voters a snapshot of the candidates for the Plymouth-Norfolk state Senate seat. Only candidates in parties where there is a contested race were interviewed.

All candidates were asked to respond to the same set of questions concerning term limits, the graduated income tax, their feelings on the return of rail service to the South Shore, their support of senate president William Bulger, and ideas for offering relief to MWRA rate payers.

Brian McDonald

Democrat

Sen. Brian McDonald bristles when someone asks:

"The MWRA — what have you done for me lately?"

"When I got elected, the state was contributing zilch to the cleanup of Boston Harbor," he says.

"We've seen $23 million in the last two budgets. It's now up to $32 million.

"I and 32 others went to Washington to lobby Congress. In October the government will make $250 million available to the MWRA.

"We have got them to change the local assessment formula from population to flow over the next three years."

Accomplishment, says McDonald, is one of the things that separates him from the other candidates in the Plymouth-Norfolk District race.

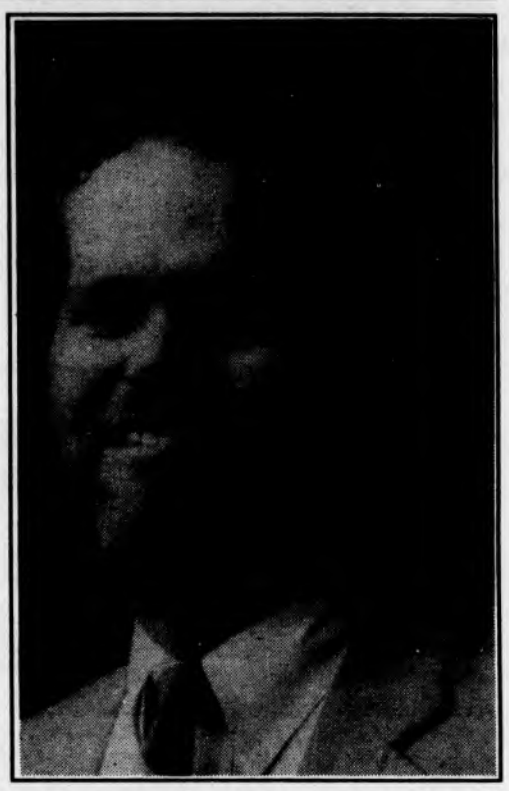
He has been the senator from the South Shore for the past two years. Before that, he was a Weymouth selectman for six.

"I have a long-standing involvement in many issues that confront the South Shore," he says, "things like transportation.

"I have the ability to get things done while maintaining an independent voice in the Senate."

Commuter service on the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush line has long been a McDonald advocacy. It's still a top priority.

"If a tunnel under Hingham Square is necessary," he says, "I will work for it.



"It may well not be necessary but I'll work to get the funding for it if it is decided that it is needed."

McDonald says he is uncommitted in the selection of a Senate president even though Bill Bulger appointed him chairman of the Senate Ethics Committee and he voted for him in his first term.

McDonald says he is personally in favor of the graduated income tax over the flat tax.

"I'll vote for it myself," he says. "But the voters will decided it is the referendum. I'll not go against the voters."

Term limits draws an emphatic "yes" from the Senators.

— Tom Henshaw

Tim Gage

Democrat

State Senate candidate and Weymouth Democrat Tim Gage is chiefly interested with eliminating what he sees as two of the South Shore's greatest problems: incumbent senator Brian McDonald and Senate president William Bulger.

"Senator McDonald is not an agent of change, somebody who will challenge the way things are done in the Senate," said Gage, an attorney and first-time candidate. "He has not come through with his campaign promises. He voted to limit legislative terms, and then at the same time he is willing to vote Senator Bulger for Senate president. How can anyone do both? It doesn't wash with me, and the voters don't appreciate it either."

A graduate of Suffolk law school, Gage says he decided to run for office against McDonald because "it was the right thing to do.

"It was my civic duty," Gage said. "When someone like Senator McDonald says he's going to do something and does another, that's false advertising. There needs to be a change in the Senate, an end to one man's control of the Senate."

What Gage favors, by contrast, is a commitment by the Senate to provide relief to Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) ratepayers.

"I have recently seen a commitment from the legislature to water and sewer rate relief, fighting for the community as a whole," Gage said. "I'd like to work at keeping that relief coming, and at keeping rates down."

Gage also approves of the return of the Greenbush spur of the Old Colony rail line, an issue of some contention along the South Shore.

"I am a proponent of the restoration and reactivation of the train," Gage said. "The South Shore needs another method of transportation. My main concern is that we have been talking about this for 10 years with no action. I'd like to see us get this off the ground, whereas now it's costing millions of dollars every year and staying on the drawing board."

The drawing board, however, is exactly where Gage would like to confine the Senate's proposals for a state graduated income tax.

"Every voter will have the opportunity to register an opinion," Gage said. "As for me, I am against the tax. I own small businesses in Boston and Weymouth, and I feel that small businesses are the backbone of our economy. They are where jobs come from. This tax is anti-business. I do not trust the current legislature not to saddle the middle class with the burden of this tax."

(See page 28)

Bob Hedlund

Republican

One would think that Bob Hedlund, a Republican, would have little or no interest in the Democratic choice for Senate president.

But, he says, "Billy Bulger's 17-year totalitarian reign must end. This is a historic year because the longest serving Senate president is going to be replaced."

And, he adds, "I'll even cross party lines to oust him."

"Realistically," says Hedlund, who served two years in the Senate (1991-92). "the votes are there to put in place a more equitable formula for figuring MWRA assessments.

"Bill Bulger played a role in hurting Weymouth interests by killing legislation that would have done that. Once we bring democracy to the State Senate then they will vote for a more equitable formula."

Hedlund says he feels his background will help him in the race, particularly if he wins the primary and has to face either Brian McDonald or Tim Gage in November.

"I'm nit an attorney or a career government employee," he says. "Many candidates run with good intentions. They talk of the need to change.

"I had a two-year record as a state senator that shows I didn't forget the people who elected me to serve. I stood by the taxpayers. I scored 100 per cent with the CLT (Citizens for Limited Taxation)."

Hedlund describes himself as "pro-mass transit," but that doesn't mean his endorsement of Greenbush commuter rail.

"I don't believe that the Greenbush 'right-of-way' is necessarily the most sensible means of mass transportation," he says.

"No one will work harder to check the impact that affects the neighbors then myself. The MBTA does not have a record as being a good neighbor I will rectify that."

The Hedlund suspicion of those in power extends to the proposed graduated income tax.

"I've got a message for the voters: Do not trust the Legislature to set up the brackets. They'll pit one class against another and it's the middle class that gets socked."

Hedlund is not only for term limits, he filed a number of bills during his two years on the Hill to bring about that reform.

"I wanted to take away their inducements to run again and again," he said. "I wanted to eliminate pensions for legislators.

"Do you know (former House speaker) George Keverian gets a $52,000 annual pension? That's obscene!"

Don Hussey

Republican

As far as Republican Donald Hussey is concerned, other candidates for the state Senate seat he seeks might match his levels of dedication and integrity — but none of them can equal his experience.

"It seems arrogant to say, but where they're going, I've already been," said Hussey, 51, a Hingham resident. "I haven't done it all, but I've done enough in this life to reach a point where I can sort out common sense from nonsense."

Hussey's list of achievements includes two years of public service at the Massachusetts Highway Department and as the assistant state aid engineer,

(See page 28)

Carolyn Van Tine

Republican

First-time state Republican senatorial candidate Carolyn Van Tine wants an end to the reign of senate president William Bulger and a return of ethics to state government.

"The status quo with Billy Bulger as senate president is not working," she said. "It seems they do business as they please up there without any regard to what is best for the people. The first thing on my agenda is to get rid of Bulger and return ethics to the state house."

Van Tine, 27, a Weymouth attorney who grew up in Hingham, said she will bring fresh ideas to the state senate if elected from the Plymouth-Norfolk District.

"I am young, but young is good," she said. "I have the enthusiasm and if I fall down and scrape my knee, I'll get back up and keep fighting. And at 27, I'm not set in my ways. I'm open to new ideas and change. I don't have pre-conceived ideas about how to get things done."

Van Tine said she differs with the other senatorial candidates because she does not have any political baggage.

Raising a healthy child

A seven-part workshop series is offered to Cohasset parents and community members. The series is designed to provide a forum for discussion of relevant adolescent health issues and effective parenting techniques.

The dates are: alternate Mondays, from Sept. 19 to Dec. 12, 7 to 9:15 p.m., at Cohasset High School. The cost is approximately $13 for reference text, Parenting Teenagers.

Registration through Sept. 16 by calling either of the numbers below.

Facilitators: Ed Leonard, M.Ed., Adjustment Counselor, Deer Hill/Joseph Osgood School, 383-6115; Michael Gill, Ed.D., Health Education Coordinator, Cohasset Public Schools, 383-6107.

Session one: Health component: "The Mountain": view and discuss this modern fable which represents a wide cross-section of viewpoints and becomes an allegory for a multitude of problem-solving situations, ranging from substance abuse to social issues. Parenting component: Understanding Your Teenager and Parenting. In beginning the parenting portion of "Raising a Healthy Child," various parenting methods and teenage misbehaviors will be looked at. Topics: ineffective methods of parenting; the goals of teenage misbehavior; discussing adolescence; some keys to successful parenting.

PSO meets Sept. 29

PSO's general fall meeting is Thursday, Sept. 29, 7:30 p.m. in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Dr. Mindy Kornhaber will speak on the topic of "Multiple Intelligences in Children." She will explain noted developmental psychologist Howard Gardner's view, which challenges the way we traditionally look at I.Q.

"Multiple Intelligences" recognizes at least seven areas of intelligence that compose a child's profile. Dr. Kornhaber will present examples of how this view is being applied in schools across the nation and is being used to promote learning outside the classroom, in museums, and cultural institutions. Parents will become aware of how they can accept and develop a child's various strengths to help learning at home.

Dr. Kornhaber is a co-researcher with Gardner at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, and one of the directors of Harvard's "Project Zero" Educational Development Group. Project Zero has been researching the development of learning process in children and adults for more than 25 years.

State senate race tops Tuesday's primary

open at 7 a.m. and close at 8 p.m.

The registration breakdown shows 1,012 Democrats, 998 Republicans and 2,704 unenrolled in either party. In addition, there are four voters registered with the Libertarian party.

The big local race on both ballots will be the senatorial fight which pits Gage versus McDonald on one ballot and Bob Hedlund, Don Hussey and Carolyn Van Tine on the Republican side.

The winners of the two nominations will face an independent, Bill Forsyth, in the Nov. 8 general election.

Now, back to Billy Bulger.

The Senator from South Boston has been the man who gives out the goodies to his fellow lawmakers since 1978, the longest of any Senate president in history.

Another senator, Bill Keating of Sharon, has served notice that he will oppose Bulger in January and is rounding up help in the form of new anti-Bulger Senate candidates.

One of them is Tim Gage, 29, once an aide to ex-Rep. Bob Ambler, who said "emphatically" in his announcement in March that he would not support Bulger for a ninth term as Senate president.

"But I will not commit to the challenge orchestrated by Keating because I will not broker my vote," he added.

McDonald, who voted for Bulger in 1993, says he is uncommitted in 1995.

"I will vote for Senate president based on what is best for the people of my district," he says.

McDonald, who was named by Bulger to chair the Senate Ethics Committee, has run mainly on his record. Gage says that record is one of "flip-flops," which includes a favorable vote on the death penalty.

The McDonald forces maintain that Gage's candidacy is just another in a long duel between Weymouth political rivals McDonald and Ambler. McDonald has been a Weymouth selectman; Gage a member of the planning board.

On the Republican ballot, the chief issue seems to be who can best support Gov. Bill Weld in his efforts to bring about change within the state government by reviving the two-party system.

A recent debate in Hingham showed that the major difference among the three Republicans is the resumption of commuter service on the Old Colony Railroad's Greenbush line.

"While I agree that this region is very poorly serviced by mass transit, I'm not sure that spending money on a revival of the Greenbush spur makes sense," said Hedlund.

"I've always been in favor of the train," said Van Tine, who is a lawyer in Hingham.

"The MBTA has not proven to me that the train is going to be safe," said Hussey.

Cong. Gerry Studds is opposed on the Democratic ballot by Roger P. Ham of Quincy, who works for Hamilton Systems Distribution Inc. of Braintree and supports the definitely not mainstream economic policies of Lyndon LaRouche.

The lone Republican congressional candidate is Keith Jason Hemeon of Sandwich.

In another contest that could be called local, Chris Iannella Jr. is seeking his second Democratic nomination for governor's council. His opposition is John Kerrigan, the old member of the Boston school committee who now lives in Quincy.

The race for the Democratic nomination for governor is wide open with Mark Roosevelt of Boston favored over Michael Barrett of Cambridge and George Bachrach of Watertown.

The winner gets the unenviable task of facing Republican Gov. Bill Weld, who has no opposition for renomination.

Two Republicans are making waves as candidates for the U.S. Senate, the post now held by Sen. Ted Kennedy of Hyannis, who has held the job for 32 years.

John Lakian of Falmouth and Mitt Romney of Belmont, the son of former Michigan governor and presidential candidate George Romney, have never held public office.

Scott Harshbarger is unopposed in seeking the Democratic nomination for a second term as state attorney general but Janis Berry of Saugus, a former assistant U.S. attorney, and Guy Carbone of Belmont, a former Metropolitan District Commissioner, are in a race for the Republican nod.

With Mike Connolly slated for retirement, the secretary of state contest has drawn two candidates for each side.

State Sen. Arthur Chase of Worcester and House Minority Leader Peter Forman of Plymouth are the Republicans and William Galvin of Boston and Augusto Grace of Burlington, both former state representatives, are the Democrats.

Joe DeNucci, the state auditor since 1987, is unopposed by a Democrat for a fourth term, but Tim Clark of Hamilton and Earle Stroll of Lexington are vying on the Republican side.

The possibility of taking on the Republican Lt. Gov.

Convenience store gets warning

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

In a majority decision, selectmen opted to issue a formal warning this week to a local convenience store rather than suspend its liquor license or doing nothing at all.

The board said Monday that there was no conclusive evidence that a 20-year-old minor showed identification when he purchased beer at Cohasset Food Mart, July 22.

At a hearing earlier this month, Cohasset police said that Steven Terry, 20, of 32 Margin Street, purchased a case of beer from the Jonathan Livingston Seagull Plaza store. Terry drove off with Brendon McCarthy, 20, of 127 Pleasant St., and Christian Anderson, 19, of 47 Ann Vinal Rd. in Scituate. The three were arrested a few minutes later at Rte. 3A and Crocker Lane.

But Steven Belivau, 34, the clerk who made the sale, said Terry presented a Massachusetts driver's license showing he was 22 years old. Belivau said Terry had been in before to purchase alcohol and presented the driver's license each time. He said the license did not look like it had been tampered with to change the birthdate.

Terry said he did not present any identification to the clerk and after a search police did not find an ID on Terry or in the car in which he was a passenger. Terry would not say if he had used a fake ID in the past to buy alcohol.

As the town licensing authority, selectmen have the right to modify, suspend, revoke or cancel a liquor license if the board finds satisfactory proof of the allegations.

Karen McKim, who has been in the convenience store business for about six years and bought Cohasset Food Mart about last spring, said it is store policy to check the ID of anyone who looks under 30 years old. Both McKim and Belivau said they had taken a training course that included tips on what to look for to spot fake IDs.

Selectmen asked the police chief to review a videotape of the liquor sale but that was apparently inconclusive.

Selectman Peter Pratt urged the board to suspend the store's license.

"At the end of the day, we need to send a signal to all licensed establishments that as diligent as they are as license holders, we have to be even more diligent," he said.

Because there was no proof that and ID was shown, Selectman Jane Goedecke moved the board not take any punitive measures but not completely absolve the establishment by issuing a warning that selectmen take the matter seriously.

Pratt joined Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan and Goedecke in voting 3-2 to issue a warning.

Believing the clerk who sold the beer, Selectmen Martha K. Gjesteby and Merle S. Brown wanted the board to take no action.

State senate race. . .

Paul Cellucci has attracted two Democrats, Marc Draisen of Boston and Robert Massie of Somerville, who claims to be the first statewide candidate with the HIV virus.

In the Democratic race for county commissioner are Peter H. Collins of Milton, Edward Milano of Stoughton, Matthias J. Mulvey of Weymouth and Braintree selectman Thomas J. Reynolds. Incumbent commissioner Bruce D. Olsen of Stoughton is unopposed in his bid for the Republican nomination.

Several candidates are unopposed in the primary:

One is Joe Malone of Waltham, Republican, who is seeking reelection as state treasurer. He will face Shannon O'Brien of Easthampton, a state senator, in November. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset is unopposed in her re-election bid.

Barry T. Hannon, Democrat, is seeking reelection as register of deeds. There is no one running for the post on the Republican side.

William D. Delahunt of Quincy is unopposed in his reelection bid and so is Nicholas Barbadoro of Braintree who is seeking reelection to the Clerk of Courts.

Public charter school takes root. . .

elements that came out of last year's state Education Reform Act, and Anderson wanted to work together with the public school system in Hull to start one. Anderson said that former Supt. of Schools Claire Sheff was excited by the prospect but her successor was not. Supt. John MacLean seemed in favor of it originally, but changed his mind based on the financing, Anderson said.

"The money follows the student," said Anderson, adding that if a student decides to go to the new school, the public school he formerly attended would have to cut the charter school a check.

Finding no support for the venture within the system, Anderson set out on his own last February to get the charter.

With him came several of the volunteers and paid staff that he had managed for Hull Public Schools.

"We're not anti-public schools," Anderson said, adding "we believe something is broken and we've got to try something new."

With no support from the public schools and no money, Anderson began to survey parents and other members of the community and found many who were as concerned with the American Public education system as he is.

The process for obtaining is a charter is enormously arduous but the real need for some kind of change keeps Anderson going.

"This is the most exciting project I've been involved with in 11 years of consulting," he said.

Anderson and his group - now an 18 member board of trustees, submitted an 108 page proposal to the secretary of education, complete with indications of community support and lined up several non-profit and college partners. Massasoit Community College and Suffolk University are two of five colleges with whom Anderson hopes to become affiliated.

Trustee Dr. Walter Johnson is a Cohasset resident and director of physics and engineering at Suffolk University and said he was drawn to the idea based on his concern about the math and science curriculums in public schools.

"America does a great job of educating the rest of the world," said Johnson, who maintained that secondary education fails to offer strong math and science training leaving American students unable to compete in higher education classes.

"We have a great education system here, but we're not training the top level students to compete in the Harvard's, Yale's and Princeton's of this country," Johnson said.

Anderson too, spoke of this weakness in American public education and explained how this public school will be different.

The approach and objective is to foster character, initiative, leadership, problem solving, critical thinking, team work and communication as well as academic skills in math/science/ technology, the humanities and communication, Anderson said.

And according to Anderson, project based learning is key to this program. Public schools use projects as an "add on" to assist in learning, said Anderson, who wants to make it central to learning.

All academic disciplines and career competencies - skills that prepare students for college, life and the work place will come through the projects. The four project areas are in environment, human services, communication and entrepreneurship.

"We've tried to design a way of educating to handle all of these needs and answer the age old question students ask, "why do I need to learn this," said Anderson, who wants to stress that all of learning is connected.

For example, in a study of midges, small gnat like insects that breed and swarm near warm bodies of water, students would do field work and experiments involving science, would write reports, press releases or correspondence to town leaders on the subject, involving English, translate this information into another language involving foreign language studies, and understand the civic processes in doing so, involving social studies.

Each student would learn at his or her own rate and move on to higher levels at a realistic individual pace with real attention to the student's interests and special needs, Anderson said.

Extended days that could go up to 5:30 p.m. and extended school years, negotiable for parents and students, will allow for student flexibility. Weekly parental involvement and input in the learning process makes the family central and gives parents more than "a bit part," he added.

Students, parents and teachers negotiate and form a learning contract that the student is required to follow but allowed to help shape. Anderson feels that student choice and empowerment is essential to their learning. Anderson calls this difference "mutual respect and weekly student self-governance."

Unlike other public schools, the charter school will be able to hire non-certified teachers - people who are active members of the work force and can offer students valuable insights into the market place. Anderson refers to these teachers as "experienced practitioners."

Student teachers from colleges, who are up to date on the latest theories in learning can keep students abreast of academic trends.

Anderson said that one of the major problems in public schools is in a structure that has allowed it to become disconnected from market forces and thus cannot provide the skills needed to succeed in college, the work place and life.

Anderson intends to bring the community into the school with mostly part-time teachers to add variety and fresh innovative perspectives to the curriculum. Apprenticeships and internships will be encouraged as a way of giving students hands-on training.

And with all academic skills and career competencies tied together in a project, Anderson said that school subjects will not seem so entirely disconnected to students. No bells will ring to disturb or distract learning and students will not be limited by the confines of the traditional school classroom.

Certified teachers will also teach and it is Anderson's hope that public school teachers will come and try the charter school out for a period of time and bring some of these innovative learning ideas back to their schools.

"We'd like this to be an R and D lab for other schools," Anderson said.

As for grades, Anderson said that too, is negotiable to an extent.

"At some grade levels, parents don't want students to have grades," he said, but added that any state requirements for standardized testing and scoring would be met.

"We're in contact with our college partners, who inform us of what they're looking for," Anderson said, adding that our students will stand a better chance of getting into the colleges they want to attend and will do better there.

The school is not scheduled to open until next September but is accepting pre-applications now and will offer Saturday and vacation enrichment programs, monthly educational forums, afternoon apprenticeship programs for high school students and college courses from Suffolk University and Massasoit Community College, Anderson said.

The charter, which Anderson hopes to receive by mid-October is for 200 students in grades K-2 and 7-10 starting in 1995, with additional grades added in subsequent years and is open by lottery to all South Shore students. Anderson said he hopes that enrollment will go up to 800 with grades K-12 along with some college courses and adult education offered.

In addition to the building at 2 Samoset Avenue in Hull, plans for opening satellites in other communities are already being discussed and Anderson envisions an actual charter school campus at some point. Overcrowding will never be a problem as Anderson never expects all students to be in the building at once.

Anderson is still lining up staff and corporate partners, is working on forming a partnership with Apple Computer, and said the response and support for the school has been terrific.

"It's very exciting. We have the luxury of starting from zip, with a whole new structure and culture," said Anderson, adding "we'll try to find new symbols to show respect for education and academics."

Newcomers open season

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club's first social event of the the season is a wine and cheese kickoff party Saturday, Sept. 24, from 4 to 6 p.m. at a member's home in Cohasset.

This party is a great way to get reacquainted with members after a busy summer and introduce new members to the club. Each member is invited and strongly encouraged to bring a prospective member to the event. The annual holiday party is planned for Saturday, Dec. 10, from 5 to 8 p.m.

This year the club is in the process of expansion, with the development of many new interest groups, including tennis, golf, walking, couples' night out, lazy gourmet, polker, and cribbage groups. Continuing groups are moms and tots play groups, gourmet, sip and stitch, book and bridge groups.

All new residents of Scituate and Cohasset or residents experiencing a change in lifestyle are invited to join. For more information, call 545-2458 for Scituate and 383-0454 for Cohasset or drop a line to P.O. Box 623, Cohasset 02025.

Alzheimer's group meets

Dr. Sanford Auerbach will speak on "Alzheimer's Disease: The Diagnosis" at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday Sept. 28 at Thaxter Community Hall, 30 Thaxter St., Hingham.

Dr. Auerbach, Director of the Behavioral Neurology Program at University Hospital, is Professor of Neurology and Psychiatry at the Boston University School of Medicine. He also serves on the scientific advisory board of ADRDA of Eastern Massachusetts and is a director of Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore.

Dr. Auerbach will explain how a diagnosis is made and how a proper diagnosis assists the family. As up to 35 percent of all individuals who have demential-like symptoms have a condition that can be treated and reversed, it is crucial to both family and patient that a complete diagnostic workup is made.

The meeting is free and open to the public. ADSGSS is a volunteer nonprofit charitable organization providing information and support to families dealing with the problems of Alzheimer's Disease.

For information call 749-5417.

Girl Scout registration

Cohasset Girl Scout registration was held Sept. 13 at the Second Congregational Church. Both new and old scouts registered. Girls from Kindergarten through high school can become Girl Scouts.

Those who missed the registration, can call Becky Bates-MacArthur at 383-0362.

The Girl Scouts are searching for an energetic individual to donate about two hours a month to write about troop activities, community participation and submit to the local press. Anyone interested should call Mary McElroy at 383-0505.

Workcamp meeting planned

An orientation meeting for the 1995 Appalachia Service Project (A.S.P.) workcamp trip is scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 18, 7:30 p.m.; to be held at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset (next to Town Hall).

Along with information about the A.S.P. experience (now in its eighth year here in Cohasset), this meeting will include formal registration for the 1995 trip (tentatively scheduled for June 24 to July 2, 1995). Any ninth- through 12th-grader is welcome to attend. Again this year there is space for 48 teenagers and those signing on early will receive priority. Parents need to attend, as well; they will need to sign the registration form and check ($50, "SCC Youth Group," non-refundable, unless space can be filled), and volunteer to help with one of the fundraisers and/or the new, to-be-formed Administrative Board (to help with trip logistics). And if you're interested in being an advisor for 1995, please attend; there'll be 24.

Derby begins 210th year

Derby Academy in Hingham, the oldest independent day school in New England, began its 210 year Sept. 12 for 245 students in prekindergarten through grade 9.

In addition to welcoming returning students and faculty, Headmaster Edward R. Foley welcomed 57 new students and introduced six new faculty members.

New faculty for the 1994-95 academic year are Donna Carbeau, kindergarten; Stephen Cass, mathematics; Nat Damon, English; Alan Rivera, Spanish and French; and David Buick, woodworking.

Cohasset's Katie Carroll, a South Shore League All-Star last fall, drills home her first goal of the season in the Skippers' 4-0 victory over '93 co-champions Norwell in Monday's opening game. The win was also the first for first-year coach Maureen O'Day-Clark.

Carroll leads girls soccer team in opening win

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

It'll be business as usual in the South Shore League this fall with the premier girls soccer teams battling it out for the title and what inevitably turns out to be several squads qualifying for the state tournament.

There will be the perennial squads that always seem to put quality players on the field; Abington, Hanover, East Bridgewater and Norwell.

However, the status quo might just go out the window. Cohasset's girls squad is on the move. The time has come to add the Skippers to the list of SSL elites.

Regarded as also-rans over the past several seasons, the Skippers opened its '94 campaign in a huge way, dropping last year's co-champions, Norwell, with a convincing 4-0 victory. The confidence-building win was the first time Cohasset has defeated the Norwell club in four years.

And while the argument might be raised that the Clippers were without their top netminder, one can't dispute the fact that Norwell had major problems penetrating Cohasset's midfield unit. The Clippers were able to unload a mere five shots on goal, while the Skippers hit the mark 15 times.

Cohasset debuted what could prove to be a consistently potent offense as the Skippers took a 3-0 lead in the first half. Senior All-Star Katie Carroll drilled home a pair of goals while Megan Rhodes and Fall sports begins for real this week and it is time for some wondrous predictions that will turn out to be good as gold.

Here we go and remember this is the same column that predicted the marriage of Michael Jackson and Lisa Marie Presley.

#1) The Norwell High football team will win the South Shore League and go to the Super Bowl.

Last year the Clippers fumbled away a shot at the Super Bowl in their second to last game against East Bridgewater.

However, with top QB Pete Hajjar back along with East Bridgewater's injury situation, the Clippers look to be the top dog in the SSL.

#2) The Hingham High boys' soccer team will battlle Plymouth North and Duxbury right to the end of the season and will win the ACL title.

This one is a stretch but Harbormen coach Bill Farrell has a veteran team that is focused on offense this year and should be able to slay the Dragons.

#3) Every single soccer team in the OCL, ACL and SSL will qualify for the state tourney with the new 50-percent rule.

Now teams simply have to finish at .500 to reach the postseason. With the parity and depth of the soccer programs around here, I wouldn't be surprised if all the teams split their games with each other. As for the postseason, get out a dart board, it could be that close.

#4) Hingham running back Corey Farina will set all kinds of rushing records for second-year coach Tony Rolfe.

Farina is one of the best athletes on the South Shore, (he is a three-sport all-star in football, basketball and baseball) is tough as nails and can run like the wind. Combine that with a high-powered Rolfe-designed offense and Farina will turn opposing defenses into creamed wheat.

#5) The Silver Lake boys' soccer team will win a fifth straight OCL title.

I know the Lakers lost many quality players to graduation, but stand-out coach Bill Johnson could take the Mighty Ducks to the league title if given enough time. In '88 he took the Lakers to the Division I state title and they didn't even win the OCL that year.

Swinging grandmothers battle at Connolly Memorial tourney

By David McKee
Mariner staff

It was quite a day for golf last Thursday as 50 swinging grandmothers hit the links for the 10th annual Betty Connolly Memorial Golf Tournament.

Connolly a grandmother from Scituate, was killed in a golf cart accident at the South Shore Country Club ten years ago. The tourney was named for her to honor her memory. The tourney is only open to grandmothers and had been going on for many years before being changed to the Betty Connolly Memorial.

This year's tourney, held at the Hatherly Country Club in Scituate, was the largest ever, according to coordinator and Cohasset resident Nancy O'Toole.

"This was the best turnout we've had," O'Toole said. "The weather was fantastic. You couldn't have asked for a better day."

As for the level of golf, O'Toole said the grandmothers all battled on the course.

"It was very competitive golf and there were some very good players," she said.

Connolly, a good friend and golfer to many was remembered by O'Toole as a nice person.

"She's remembered as a vivacious gal who loved the game of golf and touched many people," she said.

The winners at the tourney were:

Nine holers

First gross- Scituate's Doris MacIsaac.

First net- Scituate's Shirley Vasington.

Second net- Scituate's Barbara O'Brien.

Third net- Scituate's Mary Lou Murphy.

Fourth net- Scituate's Anne Geraghty.

Fifth net- Cohasset's Jean Bridgeman.

Sixth net- Scituate's Peggy Curtis.

Seventh net- Scituate's Muriel Desmond.

18-holers

First gross- Scituate's Jean Digan.

First net- Scituate's Marion Hailer.

Second net- Cohasset's Jackie Beal.

Third net- Scituate's Fran Ducey.

Fourth net- Scituate's Carol Burns.

Fifth net- Scituate's Ada Kahl.

Sixth net- Scituate's Lilla O'Donoghue.

Seventh net- Hingham's Joan Roche.

Most 7's- Cohasset's Evie Beveridge.

Closest to the line- Scituate's Jean Gaffey.

Closest to the hole in two shots on #18- Cohasset's Louis Flint.

Prizes were awarded to:

1) Kay Gartland of Scituate.

#6) Notre Dame Academy is the girls soccer team to watch in Division I.

Last the Aces were bumped and battered from the state tourney by Marshfield, who went on to lose the Division I South title in a shoot out to Newton North. This year the Aces will not stop until the win the whole show.

#7) Thanksgiving football games will still be the event of the season.

Tradition, turkey and touchdowns are still the best show around. I love state tourney soccer games, but nothing beats a muddy, snowy football game in front of 700 people.

#8) There will still be too many dumb team nicknames. The Clippers and Skippers have got to go. The Trojans, Indians and Sailors need some help. And the Rams should be bounced. I suggest cool names like the Sharks, the Rattlesnakes and the Cheetahs.

#9) I still won't learn all the rules for field hockey. Every year I watch the sport and learn something different about the sport. I've talked to parents and even some players, who can get confused about all the rules.

#10) Cross country is still the hardest sport to cover.

If you miss the start of the race, everyone is in the woods and you have no clue what's going on. Then when everyone finishes their race, they huff and puff so much you can't get any quotes. Then they bring up splits and intervals and warm-downs and I just nod my head like a dummy.

-David McKee

The University of New Hampshire's girls soccer team didn't have to wait long to see just what kind of talent it has in former Rockland High School star, Nikki Begin.

Begin, who starts at center forward for the varsity squad, scored the first goal of her collegiate career on a mid-air bicycle kick, just 2 minutes and 20 seconds into UNH's opening game, 3-2 loss to Army.

Begin added an assist to complete a strong debut for the Division 1 team.

While at Rockland High, Begin won just about every honor possible during her prolific, four-year soccer barrage. She was a two-time All-Scholastic in The Enterprise, Patriot Ledger and Boston Globe. As a senior, Begin was named to the All-New-England squad and both an Eastern Mass All-Star and All-State for the second time.

Abington High football coach Jim Kelliher has become the Tom Landry of the South Shore League. Kelliher is now in his 21st season at the Green Wave helm, the longest of any SSL coach. Look for some sort of tribute when Kelliher, who is indisputably the football institution in Abington, reaches the 25-year mark.

—J.R.

Once again the S.I.D.S. Road Race Committee pulled off a well-run event in Sunday's 10K race, walk and 2-mile fun run. Despite the, by now notorious 'Heartbreak Hill J.R.,' the course is relatively easy with rolling hills and a straight run to the finish line which gives the runners with strong finishing kicks a golden opportunity to pick up several places, depending on where they are in the pack.

There was a minor problem sorting out the finishing times of a block of runners, but it was cleared up quickly and turned out to be nothing more than an inevitable glitch that goes with the territory of putting on a road race.

The race committee should be commended for its work. With the excellent sponsorship for the race, expect it to become a mainstay in the Hingham running community.

—J.R.

Carroll leads girls soccer team

Andrea Freeman contributed single tallies in the upset win.

The win also marked the debut victory for new head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark. The wife of boys coach Keith Clark, O'Day-Clark was as excited by the triumph as her new group of players.

"You hope what you teach them they'll carry over into the games," said the 1984 East Bridgewater High graduate who also played soccer for two years at Massasoit Community College.

O'Day-Clark was hired on the spot by athletic director Clark Chatterton when she went for her interview. She is replacing Don Satter who coached the Skippers for one season before stepping down for personal reasons.

O'Day-Clark firmly believes her having played in both high school and college is an advantage in coaching and relating to the Skippers squad.

"Absolutely," she said. "It makes a big difference. I have a good relationship with the girls."

And was O'Day-Clark at all nervous about her sideline debut? "Oh God yes," she said. "I was a nervous wreck."

Schedules never become easier when it comes to girls soccer in the SSL. But first-year coaches do eventually become calmer. Victories make the process all the faster.

C.H.S. football fan voices her concerns

I would like to wish the "94" Cohasset football team good luck this season.

I attended the jamboree Saturday night in Carver. I can not understand how out of all the teams playing that evening, Cohasset's team was the only one without a player roster available. What can be more important than for a school to give their full support and assistance to the team?

While talking to other parents at the game I understand that there is a significant freshman team enrollment. There is concern that there is a shortage of safe equipment and uniforms available to the students. If this is fact, I do not understand because football is an income generating sport. However, all the money collected is deposited in a general account for all sports.

It is hard to comprehend that after years of promoting a football program and surviving the budget restraints that now when we have a brand new sports facility on the horizon, that this can happen. Our high school should be focused on providing new uniforms, equipment and all essentials to making Cohasset football, all of its players, coaches, parents, fans and administrators proud to be associated with.

The time is now to prepare for the future of Cohasset football.

Adult tennis lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept ongoing telephone registrations for adult evening tennis classes for all levels of instruction, by calling 383-6791.

Classes will be scheduled as follows: beginners, 6 to 7 p.m., Mondays; intermediates, 7 to 8 p.m., Mondays; advanced, 6 to 7 p.m., Wednesdays; beginners, 7 to 8 p.m., Wednesdays. Other classes will be scheduled as demand indicates.

All sessions are four weeks in duration and cost $35 per person, per session. Teaching will be Bill Stebbins of Cohasset Recreation Department's tennis staff. Participants who do not own or have access to a racquet should indicate this at the time of registration. Non-residents will be accepted on a space available basis. Another evening will be made available should demand indicate.

With television, radio, magazines and daily newspapers dragging you around the world, your Cohasset Mariner lets you know what's happening right around the corner.

Read about your neighbor Steve Hart, the Greenbush line, the landfill report, kindergarten admission standards, Ballet Magnificat, local advertisements, obituaries, engagements, weddings, classifieds, feature stories highlighting your neighbors and your neighborhood.

There's no other publication that covers the town like your Cohasset Mariner. So let the others haul you around the world . . .we'll bring you home.

Weather conditions make 'Hole-in-One' a wet affair

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

Cool temperatures and torrential downpours on Labor Day kept much of the anticipated participants away, but nearly $400 was still raised for the Muscular Dystrophy Association during the three-day Hole-in-One Contest held at the Cohasset Greens Practice Range.

Sponsored by the Cohasset Firefighters Local 2804, several local businesses stepped forward to donate awards.

"It was successful because of all the merchants and restaurants who donated

(See page 25)

Midget Eagles are back

The South Shore Eagles began their new season Tuesday night, Sept. 6, with a 5-3 victory over Norwell in the Pilgrim Arena High School Hockey League fall season opener. Last year's team proved to be one of the best town league teams in the state, winning the Yankee Conference Midget Open regular season, but had a heartbreaking 2-1 loss in overtime for the playoff championship.

This year's team is larger (four lines), half of which are new players. Returning from last year's team are Josh King, Bob Miller, Derek Craig, Greg Rowe, Keith Mattes and Mike Haapaoja from Rockland, Greg Howell, Greg Beltis and Scott Walker from Abington and Paul Delory from East Bridgewater. New to the team are Jarod Sullivan, Justin Fantasia, Brian McDevitt and James Foley from Abington. New from Rockland are Jason Miller, Rich Moulton, Mike Porrino, Mark Botelho, Nick Golemme and Mark Sepeck. Coach Hoby Taylor and assistant coach Joe King are also back.

Miller had a hattrick in the victory and King and Delory each put the puck in the back of the net in the opener. The team came back from 2-0 and 3-1 deficits with the help of some great goaltending from Porrino and Sullivan. The second game Wednesday night, Sept. 7, was tied 5-5, the team losing 3-0, 4-3 and 5-4 leads. Miller had four goals in the tie and Craig added one. The team's next game is Sept. 17, at 8:30 p.m. at Pilgrim Arena, Rink C.

'Hole-in-One'. . .

prizes," said Cohasett fireman, Lenny Davis, who served as the event chairman.

Scituate's Derek Prophet won Sunday's closest to the pin contest and recently retired high school janitor Charles Silva took top honors on Monday.

However, none of the entrants were able to bounce in a hole in one and claim the 1994 Chevy, donated by South Shore Chevrolet Geo.

Davis said the committee will consider holding a golf tournament next year to bring in more money for the MDA.

"That way we could guarantee a profit," he said.

Learn to skate at the Skating Club of Hingham

The Skating Club of Hingham is sponsoring a basic skills instructional skating program for boys and girls of all ages. Skates are required, helmets are recommended. "Skate With Us" is sanctioned by the United States Figure Skating Association.

Pre-Registration is Saturday, Sept. 10, at 10 a.m. Lessons begin Saturday, Sept. 17, from 11 a.m. to noon, in Rink "B" (the middle rink) at Pilgrim Skating Arena, 75 Recreation Park Drive, Hingham, and continue each Saturday through April 29. There is a one-time registration fee of $20 plus a fee of $16 for a four-week session. Enrollment will be limited to a maximum of 100 students.

Instruction is provided by Junior Instructors from the Skating Club of Hingham under the guidance of two club skating professionals. The average student to instructor ratio is 6 to 1.

Basic badge testing will be conducted weekly by the professionals who are teaching on that particular day.

For more information, call Linda Lynch at (617) 740-1473.

Tim Gage

As always, though, Gage's harshest criticisms are reserved for senators McDonald and Bulger.

"When you have five challengers for one incumbent, you have to wonder if perhaps that person is not doing their job," Gage said. "Senator McDonald received a $15,000 pay raise as head of the ethics commission and never held as much as a single hearing. I can't understand why he would do that, unless it was the result of Senator Bulger not wanting him to hold one."

— Rob Rogers

Carolyn Van Tine

"The difference between myself and the other candidates is that I can win," she said. "The others have shown they can lose. I can win the primary and go the distance against the Democrats."

She said she will push for changes in the MWRA.

"I will put pressure to make sure the costs of cleaning up the Boston Harbor are spread out state-wide," she said. "It is not fair to have this area targeted. Boston Harbor is everyone's problem."

As for the Old Colony Rail, she supports it but does not want to see expensive additions to the budget.

"I've always favored the train," she said. "It is something that will benefit the entire South Shore. But I don't want to see it have added expenses that will put the cost through the roof."

Van Tine is a strong supporter of term limits. She believes career politicians end up serving lobbyists and not their constituents. She vowed to serve only eight years in the state senate.

She also supports a the flat tax rate and does not want to see a graduated income tax voted in.

Van Tine said she is socially moderate but fiscally conservative.

With her father serving in Vietnam while she was growing up, Van Tine is a strong supporter of the military.

After graduating from Notre Dame Academy, she attended Rollins College in Florida. After studying at the London School of Economics, she earned her law degree from Suffolk University.

She has a general law practice in Weymouth, where she lives.

Her parents Nancy and Stuart reside in Hingham.

Don Hussey

eight years as the founder and president of two small businesses, and 13 years as a Norwell teacher.

Despite his appreciation for longevity and experience, however, Hussey supports both term limits and the ouster of Senate president William Bulger.

"When one man, or one group, has such power, such influence over so many people, it can lead to an exclusionary agenda," Hussey said. "That doesn't serve democracy. In fact, it's a poor second cousin of democracy."

Hussey also opposes the Senate's proposed graduated income tax.

"I can't believe that initiative was ever brought forward," Hussey said. "It's in direct opposition to initiative, self-reliance, hard work, and a sense of achievement."

One of the first things Hussey hopes to do in office is establish control over the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA).

"The legislature gave life to that authority, and the legislature has the power to take away its autonomous nature," Hussey said. "I think that if the MWRA was put under legislative control, and given accountability, it would be to the benefit of ratepayers. I also believe that cleaning up Boston Harbor is the responsibility of every citizen of Massachusetts."

Another issue Hussey feels strongly about is the proposed Greenbush line. While Hussey supports the return of rail service to the South Shore, he maintains that the current legislature has not explored all available transportation options.

"I think that the train would promote economic growth, increase property values, and provide kinds of transportation for many towns," Hussey said. "But I also think the legislature should look into dredging N[illegible] harbor and creating a first-class, state-of-the[illegible] service for Scituate and Cohasset. Why not commuter boats or a commuter bus in a network similar to Rowes' Wharf in Boston?

"If the train is a done deal, however, it has to be a safe train," Hussey continued. "Right now they're closing grade crossings in the midwest, where the population density is not nearly as great as it is on the South Shore. I've walked the tracks in Scituate, Weymouth, and Hingham, and I say let's spend the money and make it safe, while still exploring whatever other options are viable."

Selling his business and boat and beginning a one-man senate campaign in 1990, Hussey garnered 4,873 votes before losing that year's Republican primary to Bob Hedlund, whom he faces again in the current election. This year, Hussey feels, his larger, better-organized campaign stands a much greater chance of victory.

"The job wasn't done in 1990," Hussey said. "Hedlund won. So now it's time to get it done."

Senate race re-run set for Nov. 8

By Tom Henshaw and Rob Rogers
Mariner staff

It will be Round 2 in November for Sen. Brian McDonald and former Sen. Bob Hedlund.

McDonald and Hedlund both scored big Cohasset victories in Tuesday's primary elections, with the incumbent senator handily defeating Democratic upstart Tim Gage — 333 to 149 — and Hedlund, with 314 votes skyrocketing to victory over former opponent Don Hussey's 115 votes and newcomer Carolyn Van Tine's 215.

McDonald almost lost his hometown of Weymouth to Democratic primary opponent Tim Gage Tuesday, but strength down the coast enabled the bearded legislator to pull it out.

Hedlund, who lost the Senate seat in his last contest with McDonald two years ago, easily turned back challenges from Don Hussey of Hingham and Carolyn Van Tine, the Hingham attorney who now lives in Weymouth.

"The numbers are extremely promising for November," Hedlund told his supporters. "How do you like those Weymouth numbers for the Democrats?"

The numbers from Weymouth were not encourag-

Opening slated for Viking flick filmed off coast

By Alice C. Coyle
Mariner Staff

In 1492, Columbus sailed the ocean blue and discovered America, right?

Boston College Fine Arts Professor Pamela Berger would disagree. The new film 'Kilian's Chronicle - The First Story of America,' which Berger wrote, produced and directed, offers a different view on American history.

Filmed in part right here on the South Shore, along the Cohasset coastline and in Hingham's Wompatuck State Park the film will premier in Boston, Oct. 5.

Just in time for Columbus Day, the new two-hour feature may change forever the way we view our past and shed some new light on who really discovered America.

New evidence from an archaeological dig in Canada shows that it was the Vikings, who first got lost in the Atlantic and set up house in North America a full 500 years before Columbus took his wrong turn in the 15th century.

Can't you just imagine the a band of bellicose

Lady Skippers kick their way to first place

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The up-and-coming girls soccer team in the South Shore League is suddenly at the top of the, oh so competitive heap.

In her first year as head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark finds her Cohasset Junior/Senior High soccer team undefeated and in first place. The Skippers (3-0) have already beaten Norwell and scored consecutive victories over East Bridgewater (2-1) and Norton (3-0).

The quick rise to first brings with it, however, the knowledge by both O'Day-Clark and her team that the rest of the SSL will be focusing on them all the more from now on through the remainder of the regular season. Teams will be looking to avenge their defeats during the second half of the schedule when they face the Skippers for round two.

It's not spelled out in her job description, but O'Day-Clark fully intends to keep her team focused on each individual game as it is being played.

Household hazardous waste day Oct. 1

The Town of Cohasset holds its fifth annual Household Hazardous Waste Collection Day Saturday, Oct. 1, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the parking lot at the Cohasset High School.

Program is funded by town meeting and run under the direction of the Board of Health. Collection is limited to $14,350 of hazardous household materials such as pesticides, cleaning agents, corrosives, paints and flammables.

Funding this year includes $1,000 grant from the Norfolk County Conservation District. A new feature this year will be a plant bulb sale in conjunction with conservation efforts of this organization. A variety of fall bulb packs such as 30 crocus, 15 double flowering tulips, 30 iris among others will be sold at $4.50 per pack. Payment can be made by cash or check to Norfolk County Conservation District.

Collection is restricted to Cohasset residents. Call the Health Department at (617) 383-9900, ext. 121, for more details.

Food pantry gets grant

The Cohasset Food Pantry will be receive a $1,000 grant from the Boston-based Project Bread.

More than $3 million was raised from the 25th annual Walk for Hunger held last May when 46,000 walkers raised funds to feed those in need in Massachusetts.

The Cohasset Food Pantry is one of 71 programs in the South Shore and Cape Cod area to receive the grants from Project Bread.

Funds raised from the Walk for Hunger provided 14 million emergency meals to hungry men, women, and children.

In its 25 year history, Project Bread has raised more than $24 million through the efforts of 338,000 walkers.

Cohasset's sister city celebrates 50th anniversary. . .

By Joan Kovach
Mariner correspondent

Imagine a hot August morning in beautiful Cohasset. Imagine a sense of doom on that morning because an enemy army, known to be ruthless throughout the country, has taken over our village, has rounded up the selectmen, the clergy, the Advisory Committee, the entire PSO Board, in fact 200 of the town's dedicated leaders, is holding them at gunpoint in Town Hall and has announced they will be executed at dawn. Imagine the remaining citizens herded into the high school auditorium, told that it was for their own safety, but knowing other villages have had their buildings, filled with women and children, blown up by this same army.

Imagine this overwhelming sense of dread interrupted by the distant sound of tanks moving into town along North Main St., friendly tanks that succeed in scaring away the enemy, liberating the town and saving the lives of all but the two citizens the enemy shot as they fled. Imagine our gratitude to the person who, at great risk, defied his orders to send the rescue mission to our town.

If you can imagine this, and it is a hard thing for people who have never lived in a war-torn country to do, than perhaps you can begin to understand the feelings people of Souppes sur Loing had 50 years ago, and still remember today. Aug. 20, 1944, it was their village that was held by German troops, troops who were undoubtedly enraged and demoralized by the recent liberation of many of the villages surrounding Paris and determined to punish this village. It was 200 of their husbands, fathers and sons, who as suspected members of a strong cell of the French Resistance located in Souppes, were awaiting their certain execution. (Throughout the war the Resistance had hampered German progress by successfully holding a bridge in Souppes noted for its strategic importance.) It was their women and children who were forced to gather in the Church of St. Claire, and await their uncertain fate. And it was Major Thomas Churchill, a native of Cohasset, who changed the course of history for the people of Souppes.

Michel Ballot, town historian for Souppes sur Loing, with his guests Steve, Peter, and Jake Kovach, pose with local residents in World War II attire at the 50th anniversary celebration of the town's liberation.

The legend of Major Churchill is a true story. Churchill was camped in a village some distance away when two citizens of Souppes escaped and traveled all night. They found him and the Allied camp he commanded and begged for his help. His orders were to stay in position and await word from General Patton. The liberation of Paris would occur a week later, but for now, Churchill and his men were to remain outside of the city. Taking the risk he felt he must, Major Churchill responded to the pleas of the men from Souppes. He ordered the dispatch of those memorable Allied vehicles the Germans heard early that morning, and his efforts saved this village which now is the French sister city of Cohasset.

. . . of its liberation

This Aug. 20, Souppes and many of the surrounding villages observed the 50th anniversary of their release from the Germans. The celebration began with a convoy of World War II vehicles traveling through the valleys of the Loing and Lunain Rivers in this area of France south of Paris. The vehicles belong to members of CAMMA (Club Amateur de Materiel Militaire Ancien), a local group of collectors who, dressed in authentic WWII attire and carrying the weapons and supplies of the era, drove the convoy through Souppes and the surrounding towns. American Army jeeps, trucks and half-trucks, draped with the stars and stripes of Old Glory, paraded from Souppes to Bransles, Egreville, Chaintreaux, and Remauville, stopping in each village where they were received by the mayor. A momentum of joy, nostalgia and excitement built as the parade progressed. In Lorrez-Le-Bocage, the entire parade, the local citizens and the police, along with visitors from Cohasset, were invited in to the Sports Cafe for a celebratory drink. Filled with men in full WWII attire, the cafe looked like the movie set for "The Longest Day," the famous French WWII film. The energy and gratitude of that morning in August 50 years ago was captured in the cafe, as glasses of wine were passed around. The soldiers and the visiting Americans, local politicians and gendarme all raised their drinks in a toast to the American troops who fought on their soil and helped save their land.

Major Churchill died April 6, 1987. He rests in Woodside cemetery beneath a granite gravestone known as Souppes stone. It is a gift from the people of Souppes, and is a testament to this hero and their appreciation which lives on in the celebrations of 1994.

The Lee brothers, Americans living in France, talk with George Kovach of Cohasset about their collection of World War II weapons.

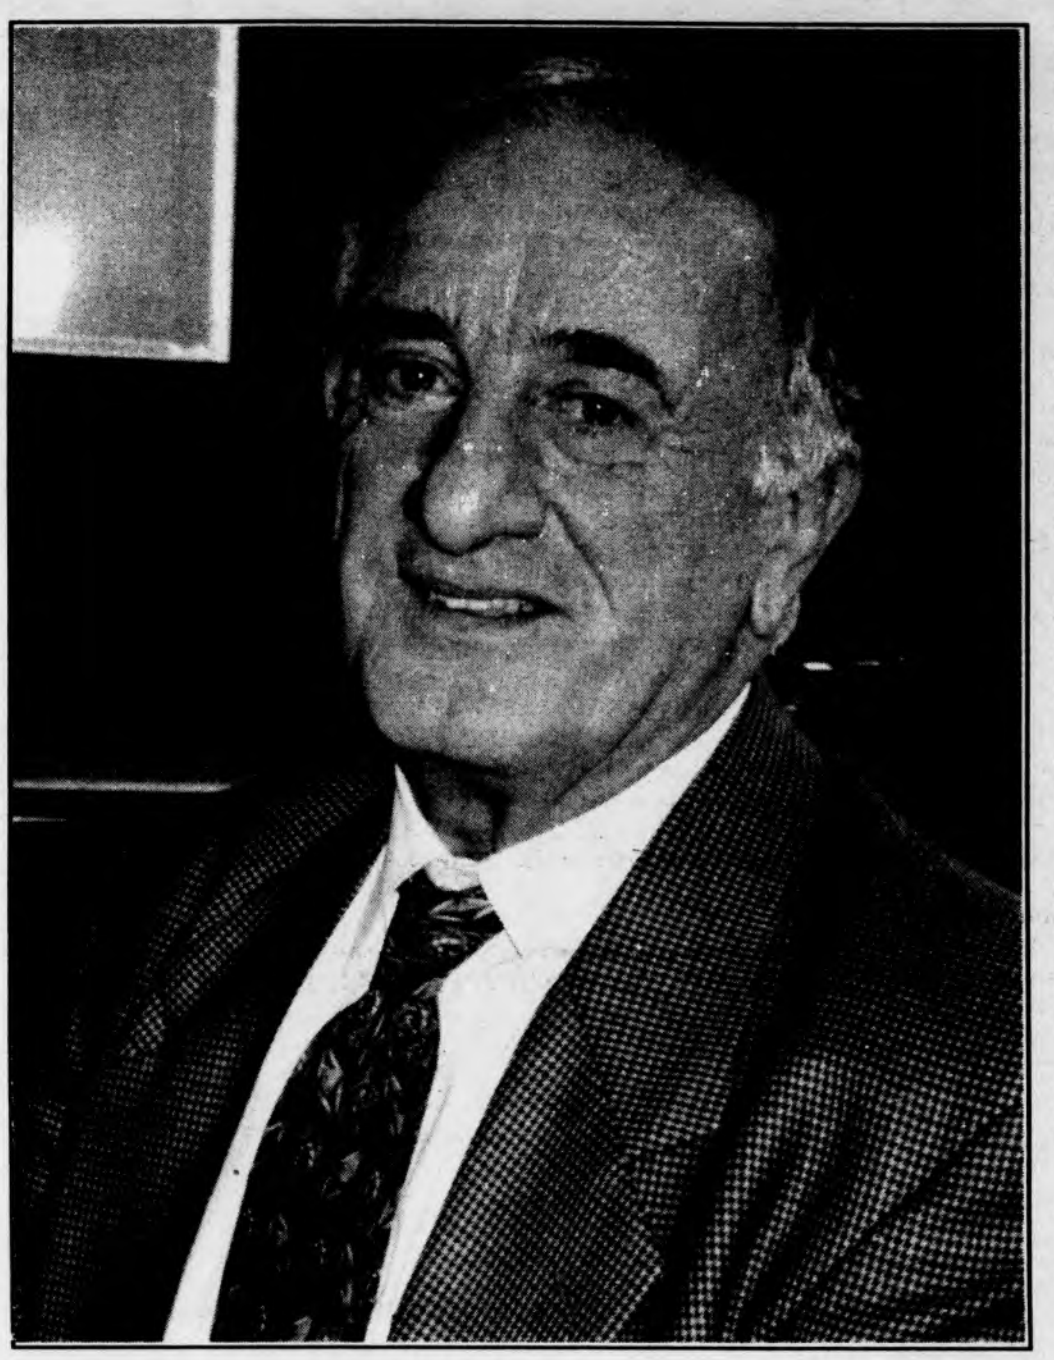
Guido Risi



Name: Guido Joseph Risi

Occupation: Interim principal at Deer Hill and staff assistant to the superintendent of schools.

Best day of your life: The day I met my wife.

Most embarrassing moment: Years ago, a teacher dragged a crying first-grader to my office after "show & tell" in class. The youngster had a crumpled up paper in his hand. It turned out is "show and tell" item was a Playboy centerfold. I had to call his parents not knowing whether they'd laugh or cry.

Goal: To serve a community that has served me well and to give a return to those most needing of my help.

Biggest worry: The problems that children are encountering today.

Favorite season: Springtime and the changes that come about.

Best vacation: Any vacation that I spend with people I love no matter where it is.

Favorite book: "Dick and Jane." You'd be amazed at the values some of us have forgotten that are written within a very simple primer.

Favorite TV show: Any good mystery or science fiction films on television.

Favorite movie(s): "The Client" and "The Pelican Brief."

Favorite junk-food: My wife takes good care of me so I'm not allowed! But occasionally I like chocolate candy.

Pet peeve: Impatience and lack of concern for others.

Person you'd most like to meet: Albert Einstein.

'White House' conference on aging

In preparation for the 1995 White House Conference on Aging, the Executive Office of Elder Affairs (EOEA) and the Cohasset Council on Aging will host a public forum especially for area seniors Thursday, Sept. 29, at 1 p.m. in Cohasset. Elders from towns surrounding Norwell/Scituate/Hingham/Hull are most welcome to attend the meeting.

The forum is designed to give elders an opportunity to let EOEA know which issues are most significant to them. This information will be a key factor in determining the agenda of the statewide "mini" White House conference to be held Oct. 25.

The statewide conference is a prelude to the White House Conference on Aging to be held next May in Washington, D.C. By holding local forums such as the one in Cohasset, delegates to both the state and national White House conferences can bring a message from the "grass roots" directly to the national level.

During the forums, seniors will be asked to describe which issues are most important to them and why. Kathy Bryanton, director of the Cohasset Council on Aging, will host the open forum, and hopes to give seniors a voice to express their opinions and to express their needs and priorities on issues such as housing, help, safety issues, economic security and special population needs.

Once the forums are completed, Elder Affairs will compile the information and distribute it to delegates who will be selected to attend the statewide mini White House conference. The delegates will then participate in focus groups designed to find ways of addressing the concerns expressed by local seniors. These recommendations will form the core of the message that Massachusetts delegates will bring to the 1995 White House conference.

Kathy Bryanton notes: "It has been over 14 years since the last White House Conference on Aging. During that time, a new generation of elders has emerged. Although certain issues are similar to those discussed in 1981, a number of different challenges face today's elders who are, in many respects, a pioneering generation. At the local forums and the state and national conferences, all of us will be working together to find creative ways of meeting the challenge of aging at the close of the century — and beyond."

Alzheimer's group meets

Dr. Sanford Auerbach will speak on "Alzheimer's Disease: The Diagnosis" at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday Sept. 28 at Thaxter Community Hall, 30 Thaxter St., Hingham.

Dr. Auerbach, Director of the Behavioral Neurology Program at University Hospital, is Professor of Neurology and Psychiatry at the Boston University School of Medicine. He also serves on the scientific advisory board of ADRDA of Eastern Massachusetts and is a director of Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore.

The meeting is free and open to the public. ADSGSS is a volunteer nonprofit charitable organization providing information and support to families dealing with the problems of Alzheimer's Disease.

For information call 749-5417.

Judge Black to speak

Judge Charles E. Black, presiding justice of the Quincy District Court and regional administrator for Region One of the District Court Department, will speak on the children in need of services petition, the common problems that bring juveniles to court and the services offered children through the courts at a meeting of the South Shore Coastline Councils for Children, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday Sept. 27 at the East Milton Congregational Church, 610 Adams St., East Milton. There will be a question and answer period following the talk.

All meetings are free and the public is welcome. A business meeting will be included and refreshgments will be served.

Here is a sure sign that fall is in full "swing!" Olga Nohe told me last week that invitations to Mr. John C. Nott's Dance Party classes at St. Stephen's Parish have been sent to all 6th and 7th grade boys and girls. The classes begin Tuesday, Sept. 27. If your child has not received an invitation or you have any questions please call Olga at 383-1273.

"Where's Charlie — where's Charlie?" was an often-heard quote at the retirement party held for Charlie Stover last weekend. Charlie was a custodian for the Cohasset School system for 31 years, and touched the lives of so many people! The party was a festive one, tons of yummy food and many people; Jay Fiori did a super job as the disc jockey, as did everyone involved. Although Charlie is "Out the door in '94," he'll still be around town, so be sure to congratulate him.

Speaking of school news, it sure was nice to see CHS principal at the football game last Saturday. Meg Gallagher sure had a long bout of being under the weather, but she looks super now! Nice to have you back, Meg.

Ken and Sue Fone have moved. They did so last week. They will still be around, they have a nice spot in Weymouth and that's not far at all. Their plans include building a new home in Maine, but for now they are right around the corner. They will always be around, they are Cohasset people at heart!

Jim and Shirley Marten are still on "Cloud Nine," even though their grandson has returned to Nairobi, Kenya. Dylan was here last summer and loved the Cohasset swimming pool, Sandy Beach, and being wheeled around Cohasset Village in his red carriage. His parents, Kay Marten and Ron Nunn, had a great time too. As you can see by the photo taken by Lynne Layman, Dylan certainly is a handsome baby, no wonder everyone adores him!

Jim and Shirley Marten are still on "Cloud Nine," even though their grandson has returned to Nairobi, Kenya. Some of you may have seen Dylan when he was here last summer. He loved the Cohasset swimming pool, Sandy Beach, and being wheeled around Cohasset Village in his red carriage.

Another Babson vs. Bowdoin soccer game took place last weekend, and, again, two Cohasset buddies faced each other on the field. Chris Kondrat (who played for Bowdoin) and Chris Goodman (for Babson), both 1994 CHS graduates, must have enjoyed seeing one another! But, someone had to win, and it was Babson, 3-1, in overtime. We all know the Babson coach, Jon Anderson, he used to be the CHS soccer coach (and is still involved in soccer camps); he was probably jumping for joy at the win!

There was a special party held last Saturday, to honor Tim Myers.

Maria Plante and Taffy Nothnagle were the organizers, it was held at the Lightkeepers House, and it was a huge success. Tim was so happy to see all of his friends, and they were happy to see him! Tim is fighting a courageous battle, and doing an admirable job! Keep up the good work, Tim, we are all rooting for you!!

Larry Shultz reports that the Soccer Pancake Breakfast was a huge success, and wants to thank you all for supporting the soccer program. Rumor has it that the pancakes were the best yet! Larry also urges everyone to mark Sept. 27 on their calendar, that is when Cohasset will play Hanover under the lights.

Speaking of schedules for sports at CHS, please check today's Mariner for this season's lineups. Post it right where you can see it, then be sure that you go. Our players work hard all week to earn a win, be there to cheer them on!

George Haley found a baseball glove at Milliken Field last week. If you lost yours, give him a call at 383-1032 and he will happily return it to you.

We surely hope that Frank Wheelwright is feeling much better as he reads this. It is reported that he is recovering from surgery at South Shore Hospital! Knowing Frank, he will be out "leaf-peeping" in no time!

When making out your food list for this week, don't forget the Cohasset Food Pantry! They are looking for things such as cereal, white rice, tunafish, canned vegetables, condiments, jellies, dish soap, laundry detergent, ziplock bags, toothpaste and shampoo.

There will be a "Food for Friends" fundraiser at Stop and Shop Saturday, Sept. 24, a bake sale. Bake for them! Call Marge Steele at 383-1319. Then, go to Stop and Shop between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., and buy some goodies!

That's the news for this week. Hope to hear from you with your news. Give me a call.

obituaries

David C. LaVange

David Cole LaVange, 60, of Cohasset a retired Air Force technical sergeant, died at home, Sept. 18.

After completing his Air Force career in 1971, Mr. LaVange worked as a mail room supervisor at South Shore Bank in Quincy for eight years before retiring early because of health problems.

A 1951 graduate of Scituate High School, Mr. LaVange played on the football team.

Enlisting in the Air Force after graduation, he was attached to the military police in the Strategic Air Command and served in Italy, Germany, Panama, Guam, Thailand, Korea, Vietnam and several U.S. bases.

He served with Air Force security throughout his career. During much of his time in the service he helped train enlisted men for advancement. He also worked with police dogs, training them while on duty in Italy.

He was a veteran of the Korean and Vietnam wars.

An active Mason, Mr. LaVange was a past master of Satuit Lodge and helped with many charitable endeavors. A member of the Taleb Grotto Band of Quincy, he played trumpet and harmonica and participated in many parades with the Masonic unit.

A member of the Satuit Band when he was in high school, he rejoined after retiring from the Air Force and for many years played at the Marshfield Fair.

Born in Scituate, he moved to Cohasset in 1973.

Mr. LaVange was a member of the George Mealy American Legion Post and Second Congregational Church.

He leaves his wife, Carolyn (Blossom) LaVange; a daughter, Susan Cole LaVange of Abington; two sisters, Betty Babbitt of Enosburg Falls, VT, and Margret Y. DuBois of Syracuse, NY.

A memorial service was held today (Sept. 22) in Second Congregational Church. Burial will be private.

Donations may be made to Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025. Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Does anybody really care?

From the way the five candidates went at each other, you'd have thought the primary races in the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate District were the races of the decade.

Maybe they were.

But you would never know it by the apparent depth of voter apathy, among Republicans, Democrats and Unenrolled.

Is Sen. Brian McDonald the independent voice of his constituents or do those constituents, as his opponent Tim Gage claimed, see him as the puppet of the 'infamous' Billy Bulger, the Senate president?

They say they do but does anybody really care?

Should Bob Hedlund, the former senator, be an elected member of a new Republican surge that will support Gov. Weld's ideas of welfare, crime and taxes and enact them into law?

They say they do but does anybody really care?

There are 4759 registered voters in Cohasset. Just 1217 of them roused themselves out of their lethargy enough to go to the polls.

Is that all who really care?

We don't think this voter malaise has anything to do with citizens being fed up with our government — something that is often used as an excuse for not participating. It's apathy. Many of you just don't care.

So in November, we don't want to hear anything about the lack of good candidates. In our state senate race alone this week, five vied for a chance to represent the district on Beacon Hill. Twenty-five percent of Cohasset voters made it to the polls Tuesday to help narrow that number down to two.

We just have one message to all of you stay-at-homes: don't complain about your government until you start really caring about it.

Resident rails about 'mob rule'

letters

To the Editor:

I wanted to share with you my disgust with several members of the Back on Track group who sabotaged the Selectmen's meeting this Monday evening. The Coastal Coalition was granted 45 minutes to present some important figures as well as allow some residents to voice their concerns about the train. Both speakers and selectmen were heckled by pro-train members. They were informed that they could ask for a similar session where they could make their case. This reasonable suggestion was met with ridicule and abuse.

Surely this is not the way to conduct town business! While a minority at the meeting, the train supporters took over the meeting and prevented a number of other people from speaking, myself included. Mob rule was the order of the night.

I am mad and embarrassed at the same time. How can any decision be reached with such blatant disregard for a published agenda and the selectmen themselves? Can any group barge in and de-rail any meeting on any issue they disagree with? Chairman Michael Sullivan granted the pro-train people equal time to speak and it was interesting that the anti-train folks did not interrupt or badger them. Local cable recorded the meeting and will verify what I am saying.

The pro-train group came across as rude and bitter people. Still, they will probably get their evening before the selectmen. While anti-train people will probably attend, I am convinced they will not disrupt or sabotage the meeting.

The proposed Greenbush line makes little sense, once the numbers are examined. Even a long time train supporter, with close association with the T itself, conceded his doubts about the project.

I thank the selectmen for keeping their cool as the meeting threatened to self-destruct. I hope that they allow the citizens of Cohasset to vote once more on the train. At that point, the town could then send a clear message to Governor Weld, one way or another.

Train woes are 'exaggerated'

(Ed.'s note: the following letter was sent to selectmen).
Board of Selectmen:

I couldn't wait the other night until the subject of the restoration of the Greenbush railroad line came up at your meeting, but I would like to be counted in favor of it.

This I do especially to counter the fear-ridden rhetoric coming from the recently developed opposition. While I can appreciate the distress of people along the right-of-way who were not there when the railroad operated, I think that most of the other opposition is groundless and the fears exaggerated. I'm sure many of those who lived by the railroad when it operated remember it without fear or concern...some with pleasant memories of it.

Certainly towns now served by modern rail equipment seem to handle it quite nicely, benefit from it in a number of ways and would fight abandonment tooth and nail. It has apparently not damaged nor caused undue safety problems in all those fine North Shore counterparts of Cohasset and has given them convenient comfortable transportation.

As for economic concerns, I believe that most of them are also exaggerated and are always cited by those timid of change or the future. Any "infrastructure" cost seems large in advance, but there should be recognition that it is amortized over generations of commuters.

As for alternatives, no one who has used modern rail service, even the MTA, would trade it for bus or boat. There is simply no comparison in comfort.

Greenbush will change things

(Ed.'s note: the following letter was sent to selectmen).
Board of Selectmen:

As a citizen of Cohasset I have many questions relating to the proposed Greenbush line, taxes, safety, environmental, noise levels, etc.

As a merchant in Cohasset Village I am concerned with the C.A.C. proposal to have our town parking area be made smaller, to accommodate the tracks and fences. Parking in our village is already a problem. Overflow cars park on the railroad bed, where will these people go now?

This is such a beautiful town to try and run a business in, to make it harder for town workers, business people and customers to have access does not seem to make sense.

As a mother in this town, I want to know who will cross my children across the tracks when they walk to school? The track has crossings five times in the village ing for McDonald.

He captured the town unofficially by a margin of 156 votes, a 3,387 to 3,229 victory over Gage, who also claims Weymouth as his hometown.

"He concentrated his campaign in Weymouth," analyzed McDonald. "He has a large family in town. I do not have a large family but I have a lot of friends."

McDonald talked to Gage by telephone shortly after claiming victory and he said the two "will sit down in the next couple of days and talk about working for the Democrats."

Following substantial victories in Hingham, Braintree, and Hull, where he captured 64 percent of the vote, Hedlund rallied his supporters for the November campaign.

"The message of this campaign is that the people have the power to redeem the work of fools," Hedlund said, quoting the lyrics to a Judybats song. "That's what we're going to do from '94 to '96. This campaign is about true welfare reform, not a scam. It is about true campaign finance reform, not the kind of scam the incumbent would like to pull with lobbyist donations. It is about fiscal stability and fiscal sanity. I will watch out for the pocketbook of the middle class."

The candidate credited his success to name recognition, the endorsement of political action group Citizens for Limited Taxation, and a well-run organization whose volunteers he ranks above McDonald's professional staff.

"We had no consultants, no large mailing house," Hedlund said. "We did it with volunteers, not a large phone bank in Dorchester."

Hedlund added that the turnout at the polls had been more than he expected, and was especially pleased at receiving nearly 50 percent of Hingham's vote.

Both Republican candidates Don Hussey and Caroline Van Tine pledged their support towards Hedlund's campaign, fulfilling promises made at the beginning of the senate race that all three would band together to topple the Democratic incumbent.

Hedlund praised the campaign efforts of his two opponents and Democratic candidate Tim Gage. He thanked his campaign staff, and urged them to prepare themselves for the coming battle against McDonald and, by inference, senate president William Bulger.

"We are going to see history being made," said Hedlund. "The longest serving Senate president is going to be bounced. Brian says he is undecided about Bulger. Does anyone here or in Weymouth believe that?"

McDonald, who voted for Bulger of Senate president in 1993, said he was undecided about Bulger in 1995.

"I'm making my decision," he said. "I'm not ready yet."

He said he was looking forward to the campaign against Hedlund and independent candidate, Bill Forsyth, who grew up in Marshfield but now claims Weymouth as his home, in the general election Nov. 8.

If anything, Forsyth is expected to draw anti-McDonald votes away from Hedlund.

"He strikes me as a pretty good guy," said the senator. "He's hard working. We agree on more issues than we disagree."

"There's seven weeks to go," McDonald told his people. "Take a few hours off and be back at it in the morning."

In light of the lackluster turnout, both primary winners may have gained greatly by virtue of name recognition.

"The response has been encouraging," McDonald said. "I've had a good field operation and lots of people out working. It's been good not only in Marshfield, but throughout the district."

"I can't be scientific with the results," said Hedlund, "but I've been told that there have been quite a few Republican votes cast.

Although Hedlund declared the Plymouth-Norfolk state senate campaign "the premiere race for the South Shore," a number of other significant primary campaigns came to a head at yesterday's election.

Representative Mary Jeanette ran unopposed, gathering 592 votes in her hometown.

Mark Roosevelt conquered the Democratic gubernatorial primary with 243 votes. George Bachrach trailed in second place with 104 votes, and Michael Barrett trailed a dismal third with 90.

Roosevelt will face Republican incumbent William Weld, who collected 624 votes while running unopposed in the primary.

Democratic incumbent Sen. Edward Kennedy, also unopposed, gathered 369 votes from Cohasset voters. He will go head-to-head between now and November with Republican winner Mitt Romney, whose 597 votes carried him head and shoulders over opponent John Lakian's 63.

U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds garnered 405 votes in his hometown to Roger P. Ham's 87.

Computer center goal is reached

By Jim Kinch
Cohasset Educational Foundation

In September the Cohasset Educational Foundation (CEF) began its third year of existence with a meeting at the High School at which President Rick Shea announced that the first major CEF-sponsored program has reached its funding goal of $22,000. Funding from the CEF will be used to purchase the equipment for the computer center at the Osgood School. And the completion of the center is expected within the next several weeks.

According to Supt. Steve Hart: "The computer center brings current technology to the elementary students and will give both students and teachers a vital resource."

The center is situated in a formerly under-used space in the school and has undergone extensive renovations over the summer. Progress on the center can be viewed by parents and the public during the Osgood open house Oct. 4.

"The achievement of this first funding goal is a significant milestone for the CEF, but we have ambitious plans for 1995 and expect to use this project as a springboard for greater success, " noted Shea.

Rick and the other members of the CEF nomination committee, Rick Flynn, Sue McNamara and Jim Kinch, are actively seeking new Board members to join with the existing Directors to assist the CEF in moving forward on these plans. Directors who are committed to education, who have good ideas for developing innovative resources and the energy to help make those ideas materialize, are sought. Anyone interested in joining the CEF call anyone on the nomination committee.

The CEF is an independent non-profit organization focused on developing new and non-traditional sources of support for the Cohasset Public School System. People interested in learning more about the mission of the CEF and its activities are encouraged to call 383-2833 or to write to the Cohasset Educational Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset, 02025, for a copy of our brochure and additional information on our programs. As a registered non-profit organization all donations to our project fund are completely tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment for Cohasset public school students.

area where all of our children walk to our three public schools. This is a major problem. As you know, grade crossings are being eliminated across the country to help solve this safety issue. I don't understand how we can possibly allow them in our village.

I have grown up in this town, chosen to run a business, and raise my children here because this is such a beautiful town. We sit out and listen to church bells in the evening, and stroll freely through the town. I don't fear for my children's lives when they walk to and from school.

People from all over the world have come to our town to enjoy its quiet, dignified beauty. Do we really want to change this?

PSO meets Sept. 29

PSO's general fall meeting is Thursday, Sept. 29, 7:30 p.m. in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Dr. Mindy Kornhaber will speak on the topic of "Multiple Intelligences in Children." She will explain noted developmental psychologist Howard Gardner's view, which challenges the way we traditionally look at I.Q.

"Multiple Intelligences" recognizes at least seven areas of intelligence that compose a child's profile. Dr. Kornhaber will present examples of how this view is being applied in schools across the nation and is being used to promote learning outside the classroom, in museums, and cultural institutions. Parents will become aware of how they can accept and develop a child's various strengths to help learning at home.

Dr. Kornhaber is a co-researcher with Gardner at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, and one of the directors of Harvard's "Project Zero" Educational Development Group. Project Zero has been researching the development of learning process in children and adults for more than 25 years.

PSO fundraiser slated

It's time again for the Sally Foster gift wrap fundraiser. Students will be offering top quality products for sale to family and friends. Fifty percent of all money collected is kept for our schools. Order dates are Sept. 12 to 27. Jan Weisenfeld (383-0466) can be called for further information.

School exchange program

Three Cohasset High School students are participating in a home-stay exchange program with the Julio Caro Baroja Institute in Getzo, Spain. Sept. 18, the three Spanish students arrived in Cohasset and were greeted by their host families. Thirty-one other students will be hosted by Scituate High School students and their families. This year Cohasset and Scituate will be participating jointly in the exchange, a venture that proved very successful in past years. Paul Narkiewicz of the Cohasset Foreign Language Department and Emilie Green of Scituate are the coordinators of this year's program.

The Spanish students will attend classes on selected days with their host friends. On other days they will be taking part in a variety of field trips in and around the Boston area.

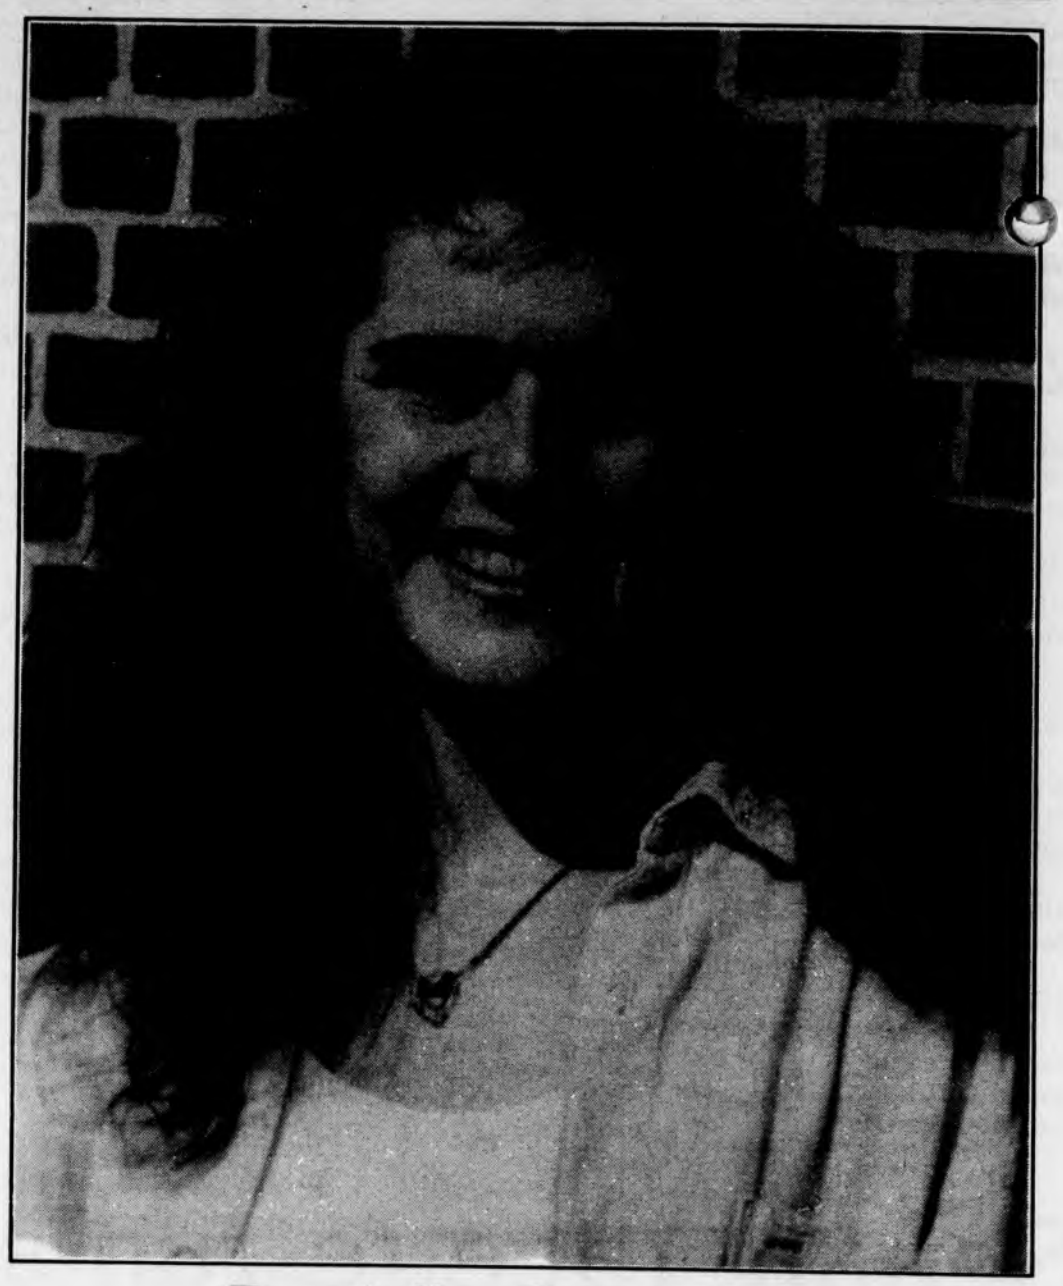
The purpose of this exchange is to live another's culture and to learn the foreign language through immersion. The students will gain a whole new perspective on themselves and their own country.

Cohasset students will visit the Basque region of Spain for two weeks over February vacation in 1995. They will live in local homes and attend some classes. They hope to visit Madrid for two days as well.

PSO school calendars

The Cohasset PSO mailed school calendars to parents of students at the Osgood, Deer Hill and junior/senior high schools. Anyone who has not received a calendar may request one from Ellen Sanchez at 383-6911.

This year's calendars include coupons from local businesses that support the schools throughout the year. Also included is a contribution envelope. Contributions are appreciated as they help to defray the costs of calendar production and mailing.



Danielle Capozzoli

student of the month

I would like to nominate Danielle Capozzoli as our September "Student of the Month."

Danielle, better known as Consuelo, was my teacher aid for the academic year 1993-94 and did an outstanding job. Her tasks included correcting, filing and a host of other little jobs that helped to make my teaching duties a little easier. She took on each job with a positive and winning attitude.

Often she commented on how much she learned from these duties and how much her Spanish improved.

It was often fun to have your quiz corrected by Danielle since she often wrote a positive or encouraging note to many of the students. Even when she was not asked to do so, Danielle helped other students with answers to their questions, patiently explaining and demonstrating how to say or write something in Spanish.

Outside the classroom I just know that she is a good friend to all who cross her path and are privileged to know her. I am looking forward to having Consuelo as my teacher aid again this year.

— Mr. J. Federico

Mom needed a helping hand... not a nursing home.

We all knew Mom was slowing down and could use some help, but even her doctor said she didn't need a nursing home. While she knew she could rely on us, Mom insisted she didn't want to be a burden to her children.

That's why we're all so glad she found a beautiful new home at Allerton House. Assisted living is a wonderful alternative: Mom gets the help she needs to stay as independent as possible, and she's already made a number of new friends.

Research series at CHS

The Cohasset High School library has a new computer reference system. Social Issues Research Series Researcher allows users to access up-to-date articles on a variety of subjects. The system is flexible, allowing everyone from the novice to the most experienced researcher to gain access to the information they choose.

This system consists of a database stored on a read-only compact disc and a computer workstation. The system compiles a list of articles containing key words the user types into the computer. Articles of interest can be printed out or saved to a diskette.

The researcher is updated twice a year with thousands of new articles.

The library has also added the SIRS Government Reporter, a computer reference system containing the full text of thousands of government documents. Topics range from health care to agriculture, crime to education, AIDS to pollution. Many documents include graphics such as charts, graphs, tables and maps.

The program also has an almanac which includes a congressional directory, providing addresses, phone numbers and names of key staff members of the U.S. Senate and House of Representative. A census data option provides tables and charts with statistics about crime, education, the environment, health, the economy and population.

The equipment is available for the Cohasset community during school hours, 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. For information call Susan McFadd at the library at 383-6100, ext. 33 between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Raising a healthy child

A seven-part workshop series is offered to Cohasset parents and community members. The series is designed to provide a forum for discussion of relevant adolescent health issues and effective parenting techniques.

The dates are: alternate Mondays, from Sept. 19 to Dec. 12, 7 to 9:15 p.m., at Cohasset High School. The cost is approximately $13 for reference text, Parenting Teenagers.

Facilitators: Ed Leonard, M.Ed., Adjustment Counselor, Deer Hill/Joseph Osgood School, 383-6115; Michael Gill, Ed.D., Health Education Coordinator, Cohasset Public Schools, 383-6107.

SESSION 2 (Oct. 3)

• Health component: Kids and Alcohol.

The quality of life of today's adolescents is not what it should be. Alcohol and drug use by children and adolescents inhibits, perhaps even blocks, their potential to grow to healthy adulthood, to meet life's challenges and to be satisfied human beings. Topics: the scope of the problem; contributing factors; prevention efforts; realistic expectations.

• Parenting component: Communication is Listening.

In this session, we will learn some basic communication skills to use with teenagers and practice using them. Topics: who owns the problem; barriers to communication; responses using reflective listening; open vs. closed responses.

Music Circus scholarship announced

The South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc., the not-for-profit group that owns and operates the South Shore Music Circus, has announced the recipient of its first scholarship award. The winner of the scholarship is Eliza Jones of Brookline. Eliza is entering her junior year at Brown University in Providence, R.I., and is a visual arts major.

Eliza met and exceeded the criteria set forth for the scholarship winner, including:

Excellent work record, including attendance, punctuality and job performance.

Demonstrated leadership qualities.

Outstanding degree of effort applied to perform her job.

Works well with co-workers and easily takes direction from supervisors.

South Shore Music Circus General Manager Vincent Longo said: "Eliza received this award because of her outstanding job performance and the ease in which she handled every task that was assigned to her."

The $1,500 scholarship award is remitted directly to the recipient's educational institution; in this case the award will go to Brown University in Eliza's name.

Vikings storming up Jerusalem Road?

'Kilian's Chronicle,' inspired by ancient Viking Sagas, is based on the story of an Irish slave, held captive by Vikings who become lost at sea.

As they come ashore off the New England Coast, (shot right in Cohasset near Cunningham Bridge) the Vikings send their Celtic slave out first to explore the region, making the character "Kilian" the first European to set foot on these shores.

The film tells of Kilian's flight to freedom and his encounter with the original people of America. These native Americans called themselves Algonquians, which means "people of the other shore" and it was these inhabitants whom the Norsemen encountered when they came to settle this land in the late 10th century.

Eventually, these native American traders drove the Viking intruders out but Kilian remains. The tribal hero Contacook, (who kills a bear emerging from a cave shot in Wompatuck State Park) becomes like a brother to Kilian. The young Kitchi, another tribe member, is both teacher and friend and the girl called "Turtle" becomes his first love. Yearning for home Kilian spends his time building a boat with the help of the Indians, so that he might return there as a free man but in the end finds his freedom among them.

The inspiration for the film comes from archaeological, textual and mytho-folkloric sources, Berger said.

"It's a combination of events described in the Sagas, as well as in folklore and mythology from Native American tradition. It is also based on new archaeological finds. But a good deal of it is pure fiction - a story that might have been, given the context of the time."

Berger, as a medievalist said she tried to make the film accessible to all people and was excited to "bring the middle ages to America."

Not only did Berger follow the textual information in the Sagas, but she also immersed herself in Native American Mythology and found that aspect of study, fascinating.

The ambiance of the native people portrayed in the film - their villages, weapons, and boats were recreated on the basis or archaeological finds of the period. The differences in viewpoints of the Norsemen and the Native Americans are woven into both the dialogue and the visual structure of the film.

Off the Cohasset coast, one of Kilian's Viking captors, Ivar holds the navigating stone that could lead him back to his homeland. Kilian steals the stone, escapes and finds a new life among the Native Americans in New England. "Kilian's Chronicle" opens in Boston, October 5.

The natives cannot understand what Kilian means when he refers to himself as a slave - a bound man.

Distinctively Irish, Kilian longs to be a free man and own a piece of land. Again his Native American friends cannot understand this desire and tell Kilian that men belong to the land; the land does not belong to men.

Kilian learns to speak their language and understand their ways and he records it all in a book he calls a 'chronicle.'

Berger explained that from scripting to making props, costumes and set, and through directing the actors, "the makers of "Kilian's Chronicle" confronted the challenges of recreating a visual analogue for the ancient texts and archaeological finds.

"But we also tried to humanize those figures whose presence is only briefly sketched or alluded to in the sources. We imagined a family context, friendships, sexual attraction, hate and love," she said.

The film opens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre in Brookline, Oct. 5. Berger will give a talk on the making of the film at Boston College, Sept. 27. For more information on the opening or the lecture call (617) 552-3350.

It's not too late to sign up for dancing classes at the Community Center. Call 383-0088 for information. Classes are taught by Tiffany Madeiras and Donna Joyce and are offered to pre-school and grade school children. Please call for days and times.

Day trip planned

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset plans a trip to Martha's Vineyard Oct. 6. This trip is open to the public and the cost is $52. This includes transportation to Woods' Hole, round-trip ferry to Vineyard Haven, sightseeing tour of the island and lunch at Starbuck's Restaurant in the Harbor View Hotel, a favorite eatery of President and Mrs. Clinton. You will have two hours to shop in Edgartown before being picked up by bus for more sightseeing, then return on the 5 o'clock ferry, arriving back in Cohasset at approximately 6:30 to 7 p.m. Tickets are limited. If you are interested call 383-0338 or 383-2649 for reservations.

Car wash benefit Oct. 1

The Appalachia Service Project has begun planning for its 1995 trip. To kick-off its fund-raising efforts, the group is sponsoring a car wash from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 1 at the Exxon station (corner of Beechwood and Rte. 3A). Donation is $5 per vehicle. A number of enthusiastic volunteers will be on hand, so please come out and support the Project's first fund raiser.

Talk on Oriental rugs

The Artist's Son Gallery, Route 3A, Cohasset, has recently become a distributor of fine Oriental rugs. The importer of these rugs, Mohammed Nooree of Boston, will be holding a fun and informative seminar on the legends and lore of these "Woven Works of Art."

The public is invited to attend the seminar at the gallery, Wednesday, Sept. 28, at 7 p.m. Discover the meanings behind the intricate designs and splendid colors that are drawn from native themes. View a display of these unique rugs while you discover the fascinating techniques used by the talented weavers.

The talk will also include useful information on determining the authenticity and value of Oriental rugs, proper placement in the home, and a care and cleaning program for this valuable investment.

Seating is limited. Please R.S.V.P. by calling 383-1801

Comedians on cable

Thursday, Sept. 22, host Wigmore Pierson's guests on Pierson to Person will be Tommy Dunham, a local comic on the South Shore; Paul Elwell, political comic and writer for "The Dennis Miller Show" and Jay Leno's Tonight Show; and Jim Flaherty, popular impersonator of Reagan, Dukakis, Clinton and Weld. A lighthearted look at politics is on Pierson's agenda for this program.

The Pierson to Person television show is broadcast live each Thursday, 8-9 p.m., from the North Scituate studio of Continental Cablevision. The show airs on Channel 53 in Hingham, and on Channels 3 and 53 in Cohasset and Scituate.

The public is invited to be part of the studio audience each Thursday evening. Those planning to attend should be at the studio on Gannett Rd. by 7:30 p.m.

For further information about upcoming guests and additional show information call the Pierson Show's Executive Producer, Robert Belliveau, at 545-2500.

Walking tour of Common

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its second 1994 walking tour of Cohasset's historical places Sunday, Oct. 9, with a guided tour of historic Cohasset Common and the center village. The tour will meet at the Society's Maritime Museum, Elm St. in the village, at 2:30 p.m. Admission to the tour event is free.

Cohasset's New England Town Common is an original Colonial Common, dating from earliest settlement of Hingham in the 1630s. Today the Common itself is ringed by Georgian, Federal, Greek revival and Victorian houses representing several major eras of American architecture, several of which were Sea Captain's homes. The 1747 Georgian Meetinghouse can be seen, along with an 1824 Federal or Adam church, an 1859 Italianate Town Hall and a 1900 Gothic stone church.

North Main Street, the major highway at the Common, is an ancient way once leading from the early settlement at Hingham to that at Scituate.

Cohasset village or business center itself has a number of 18th and 19th century buildings, several of which have been adapted for business use in more recent times.

Guiding the tour will be the society's curator. For further information, the Cohasset Historical Society's telephone is 617-383-1434.

.300 start fails to rile Clark, boys soccer squad

By Joe Reardon
Mariner staff

The Skippers have never had a lightning-fast boys soccer squad. Even last season when Cohasset battled its way through the Division 3 South Sectional tourney and into the finals against eventual state champion, Medway, the Skippers relied more on moving the ball down the field systematically through pin-point passing, rather than mowing down the competition on the way to the opponent's net.

Don't expect Cohasset to be any faster this year. But speed alone hardly translates into a down season. On the contrary, head coach Keith Clark likes the team he has put on the field for the '94 season.

"I'm pretty optimistic about our chances," said Clark. "I think we're an intelligent team that can maintain possession of the ball. We're pretty slow, as an overall unit, which makes us vulnerable to counterattacks."

Clark is hoping to avoid the counterattacks and being forced to keep pace with other teams by controlling the tempo of the game.

The Skippers did lose a number of key players from last year, which made up the backbone of the team in the middle of the field. Gone are center-midfielder Chris Kondrat, netminder Chris Goodman, forward Charlie Endris, stopper Tim Brister and fullback Brian Duffy.

Although many have graduated, the Skippers returned a core of players with varsity, and more importantly, tournament experience.

Sweeper Jim Magner and midfielder Jeremiah Stevenson will co-captain the starting unit of Ryan Freeman, Eric Henry, Brett MacQuarrie, Ben Redfield, Chris and Kevin McKenna.

Cohasset got off to a decent start after a somewhat disappointing preseason when the team had problems putting the ball in the net.

(See page 19)

Lady Skippers kick their way to first place

"I'm not going to let them do that," she said, when asked if her squad might look beyond supposedly easier games to showdowns with more seasoned clubs. "That's how you lose."

The Skippers showed they can be a vulnerable team in their 2-1 win over East Bridgewater. Cohasset got out to a fast start and banged home all their goals in the first half against the bigger Viking squad.

Junior Katy Ross continued to find her way to the net, scoring both of the Skippers' goals. Ross put Cohasset on the board for a 1-0 lead when she drilled an indirect kick past the EB netminder and then took a perfect pass from teammate Katie Carroll and added her second tally for the two-goal lead at halftime.

Cohasset's upbeat pace in the first half began to take its toll in the second as the Skippers showed definite signs of fatigue. A lot of the tiredness was brought about by the Vikings aggressive style of play, which O'Day-Clark said, was at times, overly aggressive.

"The other teams was definitely bigger and stronger," she said. "The referees did a good job. They saw EB wasn't really a clean team."

Netminder Katie Campbell played an exceptional game between the posts. The rugged sophomore made several big stops when the Vikings threatened over the second half of the game. EB managed to get one shot past Campbell with 10 minutes left to play. But that was it as she shut them down the rest of the way, finishing with 20 saves.

"She's just a 10th grader and she's doing a good job," O'Day-Clark said of her talented netminder.

The Skippers didn't look like the same team during the first half of their matchup with Norton in their next game. Instead of taking the play right at the Lancers, Cohasset was back on their heels and lacked the spring they had in the opening half of play against East Bridgewater.

Although Norton is a weaker team than the Skippers, O'Day-Clark said "they're steady" and pace themselves evenly throughout an entire game.

Even with their lethargic start Cohasset did all its scoring in the first half for the second game in a row. Ross struck first, 15 minutes into the contest. Before Norton had a chance to apply its own offensive pressure the Skippers had two more quick goals on the board.

Katie Carroll hooked up with Erin Murphy in a 10-minute span for a 3-0 Cohasset win.

O'Day-Clark was pleased with the Skippers' third win — the team's crisper passing and looser play in particular — but admitted Cohasset's overall game was far from perfect. The Skippers allowed Norton too many scoring opportunities through their own carelessness. Cohasset might be able to get away with breakdowns against some teams, but O'Day-Clark knows the Skippers' luck will run out if the same happens against teams the calibre of Norwell, Abington or East Bridgewater.

"There were chances Norton had where they definitely could have scored," she said. "It's becoming a pattern. Luck had a big part at the end when we played East Bridgewater.

Luck always plays its way into a winning team's system. Add that factor into the Skippers' overall arsenal and you get a serious challenge to the SSL throne.

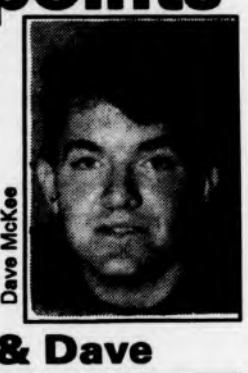
Joe Reardon



Dave McKee

by Joe & Dave

The fans are hardly the big losers now that the baseball season is officially over. Ironically, it's the players themselves and the owners who have lost millions with their stalemate meetings for the past five weeks. And an agreement is nowhere in sight, posing a possible threat to major league baseball resurfacing in April.

However, we haven't heard much from the fans in different cities. Sure, the Red Sox fans have been spared the misery of watching their bumbling team play out the string, a scant 17 games behind. But with Drew Bledsoe picking apart the Bills,' Dolphins' and Bengals' defenses for the past three weeks, and the sports community anticipating watching Cam Neely, Pervis Ellison and Dominique Wilkins through the winter, the thought of Mike Greenwell and Co., is a fleeting memory. A bad one at that.

You can't help feel bad for the tortured Cleveland Indian fans or the Yankees' faithfuls. Both teams were enjoying great playoff-bound seasons for the first time in years.

Individually, a number of players were on their way to rewriting, or at least challenging, the all-time records. The Giants' Matt Williams was on pace to break Roger Maris's record of 61 home runs in a single season. And he had a fair share of company breathing down his back. Ken Griffey Jr., Frank Thomas, Jeff Bagwell, Barry Bonds and Albert Belle were all within striking distance of the mark.

Future Hall of Famer Tony Gwynn was giving Ted Williams's distinction of being the only player to bat over .400 during the regular season a scare with his .394 average. And don't forget Cal Ripken Jr.'s chase of Lou Gehrig's string of starting 2,130 consecutive games. If there is a season come April, Ripken should break the Iron Man's feat, albeit a few games later than expected.

At least there will be individual awards presented. The M.V.P., race in the National League looks to be the rightful ownership of Bagwell while the Dodgers' Raul Mondesi appears to be a lock for Rookie of the Year.
